Form of Bequest

I give and bequeath to The Century Association, of the City of New York, a New York corporation,
the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The Century was founded and its first Constitution adopted on January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association. Forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders; forty-six others joined during the year. The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, the Association was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended on March 29, 1883.

During its early years, The Century occupied rooms at 495 Broadway from the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849, at 435 Broome Street to the spring of 1850, and at 575 Broadway until May, 1852.

By this time, it required a house and moved to 24 Clinton Place (now 46 East Eighth Street). This was its home until the spring of 1857, when it made another move, to a house at 109 (old number 42) East Fifteenth Street. On January 10, 1891, it occupied its present Clubhouse at 7 West 43rd Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

The lamp that burns at each meeting of The Century was designed in 1858 for The Column, a literary society founded in 1825. It was lighted at all subsequent meetings of The Column until Centurions John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, the only surviving members of that organization, presented it to The Century in 1901 as "a silver symbol intended to be a lasting memorial to The Column." They also presented to "all present and future members" of The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The minutes of their meeting concluded, "The Column then adjourned sine die." Today, more than one hundred years later, the lamp still burns.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1960:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

THE Exhibitions of the year were as follows:

January 6–February 28: Memorial Exhibition of Work by George M. Harding

March 2–April 17: Retrospective Exhibition of Work by Louis Bouché

April 20–May 1: Exhibition of “The Two Lost Life Portraits of Gilbert Stuart,” found on one canvas, restored and identified by Orland Campbell, with the historical background documentation by Courtney Campbell

May 4–May 29: Murals, Sketches, and Water Colors by Artist Members

June 15–September 25: Exhibition of Paintings of Hudson River Steamboats by James Bard (1815–1897) and his twin brother, John Bard (1815–1856), self-taught marine artists, lent by the New York Historical Society

October 5–October 30: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 2–November 6: Murals Celebrating the Vintage Festival

November 9–December 31: Autumn Exhibition of Oil Paintings and Sculpture by Artist Members

Silver ashtrays from Cartier’s were presented to the prize winners in the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members: Alfred Bendiner, Samuel Eldon Homsey, Hugh De Haven, Robert S. Hutchins, Carl E. Newton, Bronson S. Ray, Thorne Sherwood. Canal in Bruges by Jens Frederick Larson was voted the most popular work in the exhibition.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Artist Members, the Art Committee Medal was awarded to Xavier Gonzalez for his oil painting, Wellfleet. Honorable Mention was awarded to Charles G. Chase for his black walnut sculpture, Great Blue Heron, to Adolf Dehn for his oil painting, Spring in the Park, to Thomas P. Blagden for his oil painting, The Wild Duck. The largest popular vote by the members was cast for 10 A.M., an oil painting by John Koch.

During the year, the Association acquired the following works of Art:

Lithograph, Portrait of William Cullen Bryant by Wyatt Eaton, presented by Ward Melville

Water color, At the Foot of the Rockies, Colorado by Adolf Dehn, presented by the artist

The following works from the Association's collection were loaned:

To the Academy of Arts and Letters, Samoan Dance by John La Farge

To the Fine Arts Gallery of San Diego, California, Guerilla Warfare by Albert Bierstadt

The American Heritage Magazine was granted permission to reproduce the painting, Guerilla Warfare, by Albert Bierstadt, for use as a jigsaw puzzle, provided the name of the Association is not used on the reproduction.

The House-Art Committee has embarked upon a long-range program which will include new lighting and rehangings and restoring some of the paintings in the Association's collection.

Barry Faulkner, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

A SECOND Literary Afternoon was held on March 26th, similar to the first occasion in 1958, when the subject was "Aspects of Biography." The topic this year was "Directions of Modern Fiction." Willard Thorp served as Chairman and introduced the following speakers: Louis Auchincloss, Malcolm Cowley, Brendan Gill, and Lionel Trilling. Over two hundred members and their guests filled the Gallery and overflowed onto the stairways. Books by the speakers were selected from the Library shelves and displayed in the glass cabinets at the entrance to the Gallery.

Cabinet exhibits under Library auspices during the year included: "Winter Scenes," "Washingtoniana," "Holy Week and Easter," "Centurion Presidents of the U.S.A. in the Twentieth Century," "Still Life Studies of Fruit," "Music in Art." Of interest were two special displays on the Library tables. One display was made up of modern book designs published by Jonathan Williams and presented to the Century by John Farrar. The other was a selection of items published by the Corcoran Gallery and presented by Herman Warner Williams, Jr.

A number of books were "borrowed" during the year and never returned. Among them was the handsome "Manon Lescaut" in slipcase, illustrated by T. M. Cleland. Frank Altschul presented the Association with a replacement copy, autographed by Mr. Cleland.

Library accessions in the calendar year 1960 numbered 544 volumes (446 by purchase, 98 by donation). Books and pamphlets with Century connections amounted to 105.

Word came from the Yale University Press that the Clarence Day Memorial annual gift of about a dozen books published by the Press would be continued for the present.

The Committee frequently discussed the limited shelving facilities of the Library. The decision for the present is, "heavier discarding."

Following John Wesley's precept that cleanliness is next to godliness, all books were taken out, and both they and the shelving were given a thorough cleaning.

Dr. Samuel W. Lambert, Jr., was added to the Committee because of his special knowledge of stamps, in which the Association is rich chiefly because of the collection given by Theodore E. Steinway.

William L. Savage, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

No major physical changes were made in the Clubhouse during 1960. There were, as usual, repairs and revisions made in our roofing and in the plumbing and heating systems; the ventilation of the kitchen was greatly improved by a system of ducts and fans designed for it under the able direction of Lewis G. Adams. With the generous cooperation of the House Art Committee, under the direction of W. Knight Sturges, the Visitors' Reception Room and Coat Room were completely redecorated, to the great improvement of both these spaces. New draperies were provided for the windows and doors of the East and West and Central Rooms of the Second Floor.

Briefly, the year's program of the Monthly Dinners was as follows. In January, Arthur T. Hadley spoke upon "Why News Differs from What Actually Takes Place," giving a fascinating account of modern media and methods of journalism. In February, in an outstanding address, James Bryant Conant, the former High Commissioner of Germany, talked on "The Nature of Our Peril," with respect to atomic weapons. In March, Dr. Allen O. Whipple described "Experiences in the Near and Far East" and his interest in new and ancient hospitals in these areas. In April, Eric Larrabee, Executive Director of "American Heritage," gave a vastly entertaining and pungent talk on "After Abundance, What?" In May, Francis T. P. Plimpton showed handsome slides in color and told us of his recent travels in Russia. In June, at our usual informal meeting, President Kieffer recited his Lewis Carrollian "Jerseywocky," which was followed by a musical setting of this wonderful nonsense by Centurion George Mead. This was sung by Messrs. Walker Cain, Richard Dana, Spencer Byard, and George Mead, with Parker Bailey at the piano. Its joyful reception required a repetition of the piece.

In October, our new members were welcomed at the New Members' Dinner by President Kieffer, followed by a heart-warming address by Hugh Ferriss. In November came the annual Vintage Festival, again under the able direction of Henry Allen Moe, and for which our professional artist members provided even finer posters than those of previous years. The posters were displayed in the Gallery. One of them, by John F. Folinsbee, depicting Cowboy Pool, has now been installed in the Billiard Room. In December, Jan Juta talked on "The Golden Age of Discovery," touching upon the explorations of the Portuguese in Africa and showing his own motion picture, which illustrates the scenes of some of these fifteenth and sixteenth century explorations.

The House Committee records its thanks for gifts made during the year as follows: fresh salmon from Frederick R. Bailey, Edward J. Mathews, Frank L. Babbott, and C. Otto V. Kienbusch; maple syrup from Walter H. Kilham, Jr.; and trout from Edward R. Finch.

The Committee desires again to commend the staff of the Clubhouse for its loyal and courteous service throughout the year.

Francis W. Roudebush, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

DURING 1960 the following programs were presented:

Saturday, February 27: The Juilliard String Quartet. The program included Quartet No. 3 by Centurion William Schuman.

Saturday, April 16: Andres Segovia. The great guitarist was welcomed by a very large and enthusiastic audience.

Thursday, June 2: Eine kleine Hiatus-Musik. This was a performance, by members of the Music Committee during the counting of the ballots at the Monthly Meeting, of "Jerseywocky," President Paul Kieffer's immortal verses set to music by George Mead.

Saturday, December 17: The St. Paul's Choristers. This concert of Christmas music under the direction of Charles Ennis was happily received by the members and their guests.

George Mead, Jr., Chairman

GIFTS AND BEQUESTS

DURING 1960, the Association received the following substantial gifts:

- Bequest of William Adams Delano: $5000 for the endowment fund of The Century, “where I have spent many happy hours,” and $100 for the Christmas Fund for the employees.
- Final distribution of the remainder of a trust of $12,581.83, created by Francis Rogers: $3371.83.
- Bequest by Herbert F. Schwarz: $1000.
- Gift of securities having a value of approximately $4400, by Oswald Knauth to The Century “as a mark of my gratitude for the many happy hours I have spent within its hallowed walls.” Mr. Knauth asked that this gift be used in the discretion of the Board of Management, to pay the entrance fee of any candidate who might find the payment particularly burdensome, or to defray the past-due bills of Centurions who might be in a position of financial hardship.

OTHER MATTERS

Fortnightly Dinners. At a meeting of the House Committee, it was proposed that the holding of Fortnightly Dinners, so popular a few years ago, be resumed. The Board of Management subsequently authorized the President to appoint a Committee to make plans for a program of such dinners, and the Committee was appointed in December.

Privileges of Guests from Other Clubs. The Board of Management approved a recommendation by the House Committee that the privileges accorded to guests who use the Clubhouse under the exchange arrangement with the Garrick Club of London and The Travellers and Union Interalliée of Paris, be the same as those extended under The Century's Constitution to "distinguished strangers visiting the city" as defined in By-Law 4.

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

OF THE MEMBERS

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

§ 3. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absent members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. In case the return of an absent member shall increase the number in his class of membership above the limit prescribed, no new member in that class shall be elected until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred fifty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be seventy-five dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended April 2, 1959.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

OF MEETINGS

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of November, December, February, March, April, May and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended June 3, 1941.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

OF AMENDMENTS

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraphs (a), (d), or (j) of this By-law are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that those to whom the privileges are extended under paragraphs (a) and (d) may not introduce visitors and except that no guest may be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. [Amended March 5, 1959.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

1. Admittance to the club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A.M.
2. There will be no breakfast on Sundays.
Week days, breakfast will start at eight o'clock in the morning.
3. Week days, the Dining Room will be closed at nine o'clock in the evening.
4. Sundays, a buffet will be served from one o'clock in the afternoon to eight-thirty o'clock in the evening, except that there will be no restaurant or bar service on Saturdays or Sundays during the summer season.
5. The Bar will be open from noon to midnight except on Sundays and holidays, when it will be open from one o'clock in the afternoon to nine o'clock in the evening.
6. Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.
7. No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P.M. on Saturday nights, or after one A.M. on other nights.
8. The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A.M.

PUBLICITY

To avoid the possibility that the Century's name shall become involved in controversy, members should refrain from using the address of the Association on any letter or other paper intended to be printed or published, or for the dispatch or receipt of communications in connection with political or other public discussions.

Members should take all reasonable steps to prevent any public mention of the Association in connection with any meetings that may be held in the Clubhouse.

The rule against the admission of reporters and photographers to the Clubhouse applies to the private dining rooms as well as to other parts of the building.

As the Century is essentially a place where the amateurs of arts and letters and the professionals can hold amiable converse, it is suggested that business conferences be held in the Association's private rooms.

LADIES IN THE CLUBHOUSE

Ladies who are guests of Centurions may visit the exhibitions in the Gallery between 10:00 A.M. and 7:00 P.M.

Subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or some other Committee member designated by him, ladies who are members of governing boards of universities, colleges, schools, medical societies, and the like, shall be permitted to attend private afternoon meetings or dinners of such groups in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse.

On special occasions arranged by the Association for Centurions and their guests, such as concerts or literary afternoons, ladies may be permitted to visit the second floor of the Clubhouse.

Except as stated above, ladies may not be admitted to any of the rooms of the Clubhouse for luncheons, dinners, or other gatherings.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY THE HISTORIAN

Arthur Adams

Historian, genealogist, professor of English and Doctor of Divinity, Arthur Adams made abundant contributions in all these directions in England and America. Adams was a devoted scholar and one who has eased the labors of other scholars in the production of valuable works of reference such as concordances of poetry, expositions of family pedigrees, and analyses of old English syntax. He has served, too, at various times as army chaplain, as editor, and as librarian.

Arthur Adams was a New England Yankee by adoption, and though he was eventually received into the most Brahmin of Boston society, he was born and got his first formal education in New Jersey. He took his A.B. at Rutgers in 1902 when he was only twenty-one; a year later, Yale gave him an A.M., and in 1905 a Ph.D. His first interest was in theology; he studied at Berkeley Divinity School, and the Philadelphia Divinity School made him a Master of Sacred Theology in 1916. Meanwhile, in 1909, he had been ordained a priest in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Instead, however, of being absorbed into a clerical life, he turned his attention to the study of English literature. He went from Instructor to Associate Professor at the University of Denver and became full Professor at Trinity College in Hartford, a post he held along with that of college librarian until his retirement in 1951. During the early part of his life at Hartford he was Examining Chaplain of the Diocese of Connecticut and in the First World War was Chaplain of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

The environments of New Haven and Hartford made it inevitable that Adams's persistently inquiring and scholarly mind turn toward the exploration of early New England history. This brought him into the Connecticut Historical Society and thence into the Colonial Society of Massachusetts. He did not, however, forget his native state and, in 1931, was appointed director of the New Jersey State Commission on Historic Sites.

After his retirement as educator, he settled in Boston and became absorbed in the work of that city's Historical and Genealogical Society and was editor of its register. Meanwhile he had become member of several English antiquarian, historical, and genealogical societies.

Adams became a non-resident member of the Century in 1945, but because of his busy life away from New York we saw him infrequently.

John Angel

And the LORD opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?

And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in my hand for now would I kill thee.

And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?

And he said, Nay.

Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam and he saw the angel of the LORD. . . .

Never has this dialogue been more graphically presented than in the statuette that stands on the round table in the Century's East Room, which is the focus of conviviality. Here, beautifully executed, is the mounted Balaam; the ass with a deeply hurt expression has turned her head to ask her melancholy questions. Appropriately, this piece of sculpture is the work of Centurion John Angel and it so delighted Centurion Tom Robins that he bought it and presented it to the Club to stand, in perpetuity, on our table to make the circle of members round it happier, if possible, than they already are.

John Angel's more serious creations are the ornaments of churches. The north portals of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine are his; so are the bronze doors of Saint Patrick's Cathedral. It was once said of him: "The aura of the Middle Ages surrounds John Angel. He almost seems to have stepped out of the mediæval past with the cloak of Michelangelo thrown over his shoulders."

He was born in England eighty years ago, studied in several English art schools, and became an American citizen in 1936. The following year he settled in Sandy Hook, Connecticut, a tiny hamlet down the hill from Newtown. Here he became a delight to his neighbors, whom he was always inviting to four o'clock tea, done in the best English manner. The conversation on these occasions was always lively—his sense of humor, of which he has given us so precious a reminder, kept it so—but he also knew a lot about the stars, so it was instructive as well. Sometimes he would act with the local Town Players, making a most impressive performance in humorous roles.

He was a fellow of the Royal Society of British Sculptors, a member of the Architectural League and of the Medieval Academy of America.

In the Century, he was addicted to billiards and cowboy pool, but he appeared also as a speaker at a monthly meeting.

George Arents

The daring, the love of speed, and the quick coordination of mind and body that it takes to drive a racing car combined with the serenity and patience of a book collector in George Arents. His career between those high points of temperament was that of an industrialist, his activities those of an inventor and a philanthropist.

In the New York Public Library there is a room full of the books that reflect the industry in which he worked: tobacco. In the rare book room of the Syracuse University Library—a room named Lena R. Arents in memory of his wife—there are fifteenth-century illuminated manuscripts, first editions of American novels, of FitzGerald's Rubaiyat, of books by Voltaire, Mark Twain, and Charles Dana Gibson. These were gifts from various donors presented at the dedication of the room which will eventually contain some seven thousand volumes.

Born in New York in 1875, Arents went to school in the city and to Columbia. Later he took his M.A. at Syracuse. From Columbia he went to the American Tobacco Company in 1895. There he became interested in the machinery used in tobacco manufacture and in 1900, with Rufus L. Patterson, obtained a patent on a cigar-making machine which is said to be the pioneer in the machine manufacture of cigars. In the further pursuit of this interest he founded the American Machine and Foundry Company and its subsidiary, the International Cigar Machine Company. Meanwhile, his avocational enthusiasm for automobile racing nearly cost him his life when, in a 1904 Vanderbilt Cup race, the car he was driving overturned, killing his mechanic and severely injuring him.

Since the early 1930's, New Yorkers who walk on Fifth Avenue of a Sunday have delighted in the sound of the twenty-one bell carillon in St. Thomas Church, on the corner of Fifty-third Street. This is a memorial to George Arents's father, given to the church by his son, his widow, and his niece Mrs. Dorothy Brooks. Later, George, Junior, gave an organ to the same church in memory of his wife, Lena R. Arents.

For thirty years George Arents was a trustee of Syracuse University and was at one time Vice-Chairman of the Board. Here, in addition to the rare book room, he established the George Arents Pioneer Medals, which are given annually to University alumni who have especially distinguished themselves in their fields. He also endowed the George Arents Library Award, consisting of a medal and a cash prize of one hundred dollars to be given each year to the graduating senior who is judged by a faculty committee to have assembled the most significant book collection.

He was a Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor and was made an honorary Doctor of Letters by the College of William and Mary.

He was a Centurion for eighteen years.

Edward Duff Balken

Though those who knew him best said that he greatly prized his membership in the Century, his important work in Pittsburgh kept Edward Balken from visiting us as often as we should have liked. He was a collector of prints and paintings and an expert in the understanding and appraisal of both. His special concern was with American provincials, in the collecting of which he was a pioneer. The celebrated Hallady-Thomas Collection, which, today, is in the Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Folk Art Collection at Williamsburg, owes its existence to his inspiration. He also founded the division of prints in Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh and organized the Pittsburg Print Club. He was acting director of the Institute's Fine Arts Department. The Institute has been greatly enriched by his gifts of paintings, prints, drawings, and books.

Edward Balken was born in Pittsburgh eighty-five years ago. His father was a Norwegian immigrant who fought in the Civil War in the celebrated Hampton Battery. Edward went to school at Shadyside Academy and graduated from Princeton in 1897. To Princeton in the course of his career he has given many of the most precious items in his collection—manuscripts, books, drawings, and paintings. Two years before his death, he gave to Princeton his private collection of sixty-five American primitive paintings.

Balken was tall, spare, and strikingly handsome. He had one white lock of hair, and his close friends say he was pleased when they told him he was emulating Whistler. He inspired great affection. He was sensitive, intuitively responsive to beauty, and quickly repelled by the tawdry or pretentious.

Unhappily, in his last years he was blind—an affliction that must have been hard indeed for one who had sought and found and possessed visual delights through all his life.

He was a Centurion for thirty-three years.

Arthur Ballantine

A Republican who served in the administration of Centurion Herbert Hoover and also, for a time, under Centurion Franklin Roosevelt, Arthur Ballantine was an authority on tax and corporate law. Under Hoover, he was Assistant Secretary and Under Secretary of the Treasury; after Roosevelt's inauguration, he remained in the Under Secretary's office at the request of Secretary William H. Woodin. He was there during the banking crisis at the start of the Roosevelt administration and he is credited with the formulation of the plan for reopening the banks which had been closed in the so-called "bank holiday." He also aided in the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of which he became a director.

Born in Oberlin, Ohio, he was the son of a former president of Oberlin College, William G. Ballantine. In 1904 he graduated summa cum laude from Harvard and went to the Harvard Law School. In college he was class orator and an editor of the Harvard Crimson at a time when Franklin Roosevelt was on the paper's staff.

His first law practice was in Boston with the firm of Gaston, Snow and Saltonstall; he was later with Goodwin, Proctor and Ballantine, also in Boston. When he came to New York he was with Root, Clark Buckner and Howland—now Dewey, Ballantine, Bushky, Palmer and Wood. During the First World War he served as a member of a three-lawyer committee to advise the Commissioner of Internal Revenue about the new war revenue laws. In the war's last year he was appointed Solicitor of Internal Revenue and reorganized that office. It was in 1931 that Hoover took him into the Treasury Department. In the Second World War he made a report on the organization, methods, and procedure of naval courts with recommendations for improvement. For this he was given the Distinguished Public Service Certificate of Award from the Navy.

He was decorated with the Order of the White Lion by Czechoslovakia and was a member of the French Legion of Honor. He was treasurer of the Committee for Reeducation of Refugee Lawyers.

His wit and the amusing stories he told with the art of a true raconteur delighted his friends. He was a Centurion for thirty years.

Philip Milledoler Brett

A lawyer by profession with avocations of archaeology, history, and music, Philip Brett was one of the senior members of our association and an upholder of our tradition of longevity. He died on the threshold of ninety. He was a scholar and a singer; he possessed two doctorates and was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and of the University Glee Club.

Born in Newark in 1871, he prepared for Rutgers at Hasbrouck Institute. He took his B.A. at Rutgers in 1892 and his LL.B. at New York Law School two years later. In the same year, at the age of twenty-three, he began law practice and was soon a member of the firm of Kellogg, Rose and Smith. In 1929 he was a partner of Nevins, Brett and Kellogg—and with them he remained. Meanwhile he had served as Trustee of Rutgers University and as first lieutenant in the Signal Corps branch of the New Jersey National Guard. In 1931, he won an LL.D. degree from Rutgers and another from La Fayette College in 1942. In 1932 he was acting president of Rutgers. Here he followed in the footsteps of his great-grandfather Dr. Philip Milledoler, who had been president a hundred years before.

In his college days Brett had been an athlete, skillful in a variety of sports. He was captain of the Rutgers football squad, played on the baseball team, and was a member of the championship tennis doubles team. In football, he is said to have invented the system of passing, instead of snapping the ball from center to quarterback.

He was a former president of the Edinburgh Realty Corporation of New York and a former president of the University Club here.

Henry Morgan Brookfield

Henry Brookfield survived most of his friends and contemporaries in the Century. In another year he would have been ninety. For most of his life, he lived in New York.

He was an industrialist and an inventor; his business was the manufacture of glass, and his special technical concern was with the glass insulators used by the telephone companies. But his deepest interest was with genealogy and history, and in his probings into his family origins he encountered persons and incidents of earliest American history. In his book, Twelve Generations in America, he explored the backgrounds and activities of such celebrated pioneers as William Brewster, John Oldham, and Anne Hutchinson.

Brookfield was born in Brooklyn in 1871 but his family moved across the river during his second year. He went from Centurion J. H. Morse's boys' school in New York to Columbia, where he spent two years. He finished his education at Harvard, where he took his A.B. with the class of 1893. After his graduation, he went into the family glass business, the Brookfield Glass Company. In 1903, at his father's death, he became president of the company.

Light is shed on the less serious side of Henry Brookfield's life in Manhattan by the brief paragraph in the Sixth Report of the Harvard Class of 1893, which was published on the class's twenty-fifth anniversary in 1918.

"Brookfield finds life in the great metropolis so gay and interesting that, among all the parties and balls, he is unable to think of his humbler associates in the class and supply the personal information which they would be glad to have about his numerous activities."

He was a Centurion for more than thirty years.

Gilbert Goodwin Browne

Gil Browne was an exceptional businessman; with him, making money was incidental and unimportant. His only interest, apparently, was in the project; his effort was to be constructive; he was detached, almost aloof from the material success that followed. He did make money, sure enough—perhaps that is one way to do it—but the thing that distinguished him was not that he had money but what he did with it. His anonymous generosity spread out in wide circles. He lifted many a friend—or sometimes only an acquaintance—out of despair, but no one ever heard about it from him; only from the beneficiary. Gil Browne was a kind man, a gentle one, and selfless.

He graduated from Harvard College in 1910 at the age of twenty-one. As an undergraduate he was a celebrated athlete. He played end on the first football team that Percy Haughton coached, and in 1908 Walter Camp selected him for his all-American team. He played on the hockey and basketball teams as well; he was a low-handicap golfer and a top-grade tennis player. He had an unusual gift of coordination; eyes and muscles were always in close cahoots.

His business career began in 1911 when he entered the banking and investment firm of White, Weld and Company. Five years later he became a general partner. He was director in several corporations, among them the City Bank Farmers Trust Company, the Oklahoma Natural Gas Company, the El Paso Natural Gas Company, the Overseas Security Company, the Dominick Fund, and Robert Reis and Company.

In the First World War, Gil was a field artillery officer and attained the rank of major. In the Second World War, he was chairman of the Price Adjustment Board of the Army Air Force's Eastern Procurement District.

His hobbies were carpentry and flowers. At his home in Wilton, Connecticut, he set up a carpenter shop in which he made furniture that rivaled the beauty of a professional cabinetmaker's work. With the aid and counsel of an Italian gardener he developed special varieties of flowers, and his Wilton gardens were known to garden lovers through all of Fairfield county.

His humor was enhanced by a deadpan manner, a recollection of which still makes a fellow Centurion laugh.

"I remember," this friend writes, "a gathering of business associates all, like myself, from the South, at Gil's house where he produced a volume of collected reports by his father who had been a reporter on a New York paper in the war between the states. The author was evidently very young and his views on the controversy were rabid on the side of the North to the point of violent abuse of the cause and of the people of the South. Gil selected the passages and read them to this little group of southerners without comment, but in such a manner that we to a man were convulsed with laughter."

Unfortunately, illness and an increasing deafness kept him, in later years, from the club. He did, however, come to the monthly dinners when he could. He was a member for twelve years.

Edwin Chinlund

Ed Chinlund was wise in the ways of finance and he directed his wisdom generously. He was, for example, secretary of the Board of Trustees of Roosevelt Hospital in a period of formative change. Here he devoted himself to the hospital's financial and budgetary problems, and anyone who has had anything to do with hospitals knows what delicate and exacting work this is. Chinlund brought to it a personal charm that endeared him to his fellow trustees.

There was another cause—a civic one—into which he threw himself with characteristic zeal and enthusiasm. In recent years there was a serious movement to reform the antiquated court structure that had prevailed in New York State for more than a century. To promote it, the Committee for Modern Courts, Incorporated, composed of representatives of business organizations and of social and civic institutions was organized and Chinlund was chosen for chairman. It was a field wholly new to him, yet he not only instantly grasped the intent of the effort but was quick to devise the most effective approaches to its success. To his fellow workers, his resourcefulness and energy were amazing. Whether it was the raising of money, appearing and arguing before legislative committees, or exploring the media of publicity, he was tireless and unsparing of himself. The result, largely due to his effort, was the passage of an amendment to the State Constitution reorganizing the court structure.

Edwin Chinlund was born in Chicago in 1890 and was educated at Northwestern University. In 1907 he was a junior accountant for the Chicago Railway Company. He became interested in the business of communications. As president of Postal Telegraph and the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company he was instrumental in bringing about the merger of Postal Telegraph and Western Union. He also was vice-president and controller of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. For his work as a representative of Swedish interests in the Scandinavian Airlines System he was decorated on behalf of King Gustav VI of Sweden with the insignia of Knight of the Royal Order of Vasa.

In 1942, he joined R. H. Macy and Company as vice-president, director, and member of the executive committee and three years later was elected treasurer of the corporation. He continued with Macy's until three years before his death.

In 1957, he served as treasurer of the Billy Graham New York Crusade.

He was a Centurion for nearly twenty years.

Stephen Carlton Clark

Stephen Clark's interests ranged far and wide, from the most modern phases of art to the antiquities of baseball. The most striking monuments to his memory are the celebrated Stephen C. Clark art collection, in which both Rembrandt and Picasso are represented, and the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, which contains eighty-four bronze plaques dedicated to heroes of the American game.

Our artist members cannot imagine how the Century Art Gallery could have got along through the last forty years without the help of Stephen Clark. As far back as most of us can remember he was on the Committee on Art and for many years he was in charge of the shows in the Gallery—balanced, imaginative exhibitions of painting and sculpture to which members were proud to bring their families and friends. He accepted no praise for this highly creative performance; he made a sharp distinction between talent and taste and would only admit to taste. "I have no talents," he would say. "I don't know very much. But I think I can recognize quality when I see it."

For a hundred years the Clark family has been part of the American tradition. Without them the Singer Sewing Machine would not have been possible. The Singer Manufacturing Company, founded by Stephen's father, Alfred Corning Clark, has penetrated every corner of the world. Like the American harvesting machinery and the cheap car, the civilizing effect of its product can scarcely be estimated; but this has been followed by the further civilizing effect of the wealth it produced. For the sons of Alfred Clark have been humanitarian givers, turning the fortune they inherited into widely flowing cultural channels.

Stephen chose Cooperstown, New York, as the headquarters of his activities. The people of the community and the farmers round about have long been familiar with the unassuming man in the threadbare coat rattling about in an old Chevy, and they have known that everywhere he went he enriched the countryside. But no stranger would ever have recognized him as a person of great wealth. He seemed to give no thought to material things. His habits were almost Spartan: up at six in the morning, eating frugally and drinking more so; but the thing that most distinguished him from other rich men was the absence of any barrier between him and the humblest citizen—farmer or worker or ballplayer; caddy or water boy or housewife.

In upstate New York, his main concern was to preserve the grass-root artifacts of history and folklore and make them part of the continuing cultural stream. He was well aware of the prevailing syncopated American trend, the unfortunate tendency to forget the past in the intensity of the present—the interruptions of continuity in our review of nearly every progression. That was why he founded the Farmers' Museum at Cooperstown, Fenimore House, which became the permanent headquarters of the State Historical Association and the Baseball Hall of Fame.

He unearthed what may have been a legend that baseball was first played on the near-by Abner Doubleday Field in 1839. He then began collecting ancient baseballs, bats, gloves, and mitts and later interested the President of the National League in housing these and the bronze plaques in a building for which he donated the funds. All this took him into the attics of humble collectors of all sorts of small things; these he brought into the open and assembled into their pattern of growth in the museums.

Stephen Clark graduated from Yale in 1903 and took his LL.B. at Columbia in 1907. In 1910 he was elected to the New York State Assembly. During the First World War, he was lieutenant colonel in the Adjutant General's Department, a service for which he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. During the 1920's he owned and published several newspapers in Albany. Then he took an active part in the family business as a member of its Board of Directors. He managed the family foundations, and through them—the Clark and Scriven Foundations—he established his humanitarian projects, including the one that was nearest his heart, the Mary Imogene Bassett Memorial Hospital in Coopers-town, which is said to have set the standards for rural hospitals through the nation.

His interest in art led the Metropolitan Museum to make him a director, and he became also a trustee of the Museum of Modern Art. In 1957 Yale gave him the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

In our special Centurion sense, Stephen Clark was a true amateur of the arts.

Dean Cornwell

Outside the circle of its membership, The Century is sometimes thought of as an austere gathering place of persons too distinguished to be gay. We who have been to certain warm evenings such as the November Vintage Festival know better. Then the walls of the art gallery are hung with the uninhibited expressions of artist members who vie with one another to portray Bacchus at his gayest. The week before the festival, the painters work fast to splash their thoughts on enormous sheets of brown paper, and the week after the gallery resounds with the laughter conjured up by their fancies.

No one enjoyed these exhibitions more or contributed to them more exuberantly than Dean Cornwell. To an illustrator turned muralist, they gave the perfect chance to relax within the frame of his profession. But Cornwell also took active part in organizing the more serious Century shows; at the time of his death he had been chairman of the Committee on Exhibitions for five years.

In the historical illustrations and murals which formed the principal body of his work, he was meticulously careful about authenticity; his research, much of which involved travel, was wide and deep. His largest and best-known mural in the Los Angeles Public Library illustrates the history of California and was five years in the making. It consists of four panels forty feet square and eight smaller ones; there are three hundred figures of heroic size and one may guess at the extent of study their painting required.

A native of Louisville, Kentucky, Cornwell's first professional education was at the Chicago Art Institute. He was an apprentice of the late English muralist, Frank Brangwyn. His first job was drawing maps for the Chicago Tribune of the battlefields of the First World War. He then became an illustrator of books, and Blasco Ibáñez, Peter B. Kyne, Irvin S. Cobb, and James Oliver Curwood were indebted to him for the graphic portrayal of their characters. At one time he was president of the Society of Illustrators.

When he turned to mural painting, he adorned the walls of many commercial and government buildings. There was the General Motors building at the New York World's Fair of 1939; the Lincoln Memorial in Redlands, California; the County Courthouse in Nashville, Tennessee; and post offices in Morgantown and Chapel Hill, North Carolina. For the Eastern Air Lines office in Rockefeller Center, he painted the history of transportation. But his work was not confined to the United States. His murals are in the International Labor Office in Geneva, the Battle Monument at the American Cemetery in Neuville-en-Condroz in Belgium, and in the King's Robing Room at the House of Lords in London, where he collaborated with Frank Brangwyn.

He won two first prizes for illustrations awarded by the Wilmington Society of Fine Arts, and the Architectural League of New York gave him a gold medal for "his intelligent enhancement of many public buildings that has been carried out with brilliant draftsmanship and talent for inventive composition."

Few artist members have endeared themselves to so many Centurions in so short a time. Since his election in 1954 he has given us all pleasure not only in his own work but, too, in the many exciting exhibitions he has arranged for our enjoyment.

Everett Uberto Crosby

Like several best-loved Centurions, Everett Crosby chose Nantucket as his favorite stomping ground. Here, although not himself an architect, his promotion of the restoration of hundred-year-old Nantucket houses was so effective that the American Institute of Architects made him an honorary member. The houses of whaling captains with their "widows' walks" and absence of ornamentation, but beautiful in the proportion of their dimensions, were among those he saved from dissolution and decay. In preserving the houses he preserved too the atmosphere of the historic island in the physical aspect of harmonious design. In addition to—or rather complementary to—the restorations he did much research into the work of such Nantucket craftsmen of the past as silversmiths and cabinet makers.

Crosby's profession was insurance. He was a founder of the New York insurance firm of Brown and Crosby, of which for many years he was president. He also helped found the Insurance Society of New York and was active in the work of the National Fire Protection Association and the Insurance Brokers Association of the city. He was an expert in sprinkler protection and in fire protection in general and wrote extensively on these subjects.

Everett Crosby was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1871. In his early twenties he became manager of the Underwriters Bureau of New England. For six years after 1900, he was general agent in the United States for the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company. In 1904 Theodore Roosevelt appointed him a member of the five-man committee on Conservation of Natural Resources.

His writing was by no means confined to his profession. He wrote much about Nantucket. Among his regional studies were Eastman Johnson at Nantucket, Susan's Teeth, Much About Scrimshaw, Nantucket Bibliography, The Spoon Primer: Nantucket Silversmiths and Their Marks, and Books and Baskets, Signs and Silver of Old Time Nantucket.

Everett Crosby was an amateur of the arts in the truest Century sense of that term.

William Adams Delano

Honorary membership, the highest award the Century gives, is conferred upon a member not so much to honor him as in recognition that he has honored our Association. We have rarely had a member whose work in the world has made us prouder to claim him than Billy Delano and we have never had a better friend. For more than fifty years our clubhouse has been warmer for his presence, and there has not been one of us who has not been happier for even a brief talk with him.

William Adams Delano was one of America's first architects. Although New York was the center of his achievement, it did not confine his art. Some of its finest expression has been in Paris, in Venice, in New Haven, and in Washington. In Europe he carried America with him; he brought it respect and admiration from folk whose thought of us had been distorted by tourists and movies. Nothing could have shown better the deep understanding between Americans and Frenchmen who were aware of quiet beauty that knows no frontiers than the American Embassy building in the Avenue Gabriel in Paris. Into it went all that Billy Delano knew about France—and that was a great deal—and all of the American tradition that had endeared Franklin and Jefferson to the French, put together with Billy's unique skill. And to the delight of many a Parisian, it was in perfect harmony with the old Paris.

His appointment as architectural consultant to the Commission of Renovation of the White House is said to have been the climax of his career. During his three years in this post, he was far more than a consultant. At the request of President Truman he designed the balcony that Truman's opponents called a "back porch." Such an addition was not unprecedented: historians could point to plenty of presidents who had made changes that had come to be recognized as improvements. It is likely that some of the criticism of the project stemmed from the fact that Mr. Truman wanted it.

The objections evaporated, however, when the job was finished and the public and architects alike realized that the President had picked the ideal man for it.

Delano's work on the White House was done under a painful handicap. No one heard him complain, but his close friends knew that for a man who was crippled by arthritis to have to walk on beams or girders when a misstep would have meant disaster was not easy. But his insistence on this kind of thoroughness in every detail was as characteristic as his courage.

Born in New York City in 1874, he lived to see many changes there, some of which he had little sympathy with. He used to say that he was glad that he had "had the luck to practice my profession in the first half of this century when architecture had a more personal touch." The design of structures that were meant to be lived in had suffered, he thought, from absence of privacy. "I cannot believe man will always be happy," he said, "living in a 'goldfish bowl,' where the 'space content' idea, now prevalent, mixes the children, the guests, the hosts and the kitchen—everything except the bathroom—in one undefined, or almost undefined area."

Delano graduated from Yale in 1895 and took his Fine Arts degree three years later. He studied at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. For seven years from 1903, he was a professor of design at Columbia. He served for four years on the National Committee on Fine Arts and for sixteen years as a member of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. In 1939, he served on the board of design for the New York World's Fair. In the course of his career he was an academician of the National Academy of Design, a fellow of the American Institute of Architects, a member of the Beaux Arts Society and the Académie des Beaux Arts, Institut de France. He was an officer of the Legion of Honor. In 1953 he was awarded the highest professional honor of the American Institute of Architects—the gold medal.

Billy Delano had been with us since 1907. He was at the Club in every hour he could spare from his exacting profession. He served on every committee; in 1947 he was elected Second Vice-President and a year later First Vice-President. At the monthly meeting in May, 1956, he was elected to honorary membership.

Lately, when every step was painful to him, the warmth of the Century seemed to ease him and to compensate him for the effort of coming. We were sorry, then, that in his last year he stayed away. His courage had not failed but he thought his deafness had made him a burden to his friends. His friends thought otherwise, but it was like him to think of them first.

John Hampden Dougherty

John Dougherty was the last of three distinguished Centurion brothers to leave us. The others were Paul, the painter, and Walter Hampden, the actor. "Jack took to the law," writes a lawyer friend, "but he was the spiritual brother of his brothers." That is a way Centurion lawyers have: they are spiritual brothers of the most creative artists among us. God bless them!

Jack Dougherty's thought and interest moved far beyond any routine practice of the law. He was a discriminating critic of the theatre and a fastidious judge of books. In his use of words he was a purist, and his legal papers had the kind of spare, precise elegance that is becoming increasingly rare.

He was born in Brooklyn in 1886. He graduated from Yale in 1906 and three years later took his law degree from the Harvard Law School. In 1916, he became a partner of Centurion Philip J. McCook in the firm of McCook, Reed and Dougherty. With the entrance of the United States into the First World War, he tried to get in the army but was not physically qualified. Because of his special knowledge of the French language—in which he had specialized in college—he was able to serve in a unit of the American Red Cross which was attached to the French Army. In Lorraine, after the Armistice, he met the French girl who became his wife.

Among his colleagues, he was known as an individualist who refused to conform to any formulated methods in his profession. That was why, perhaps, he chose to work in firms that were smaller than the large organizations which were called, irreverently, “law factories.”

For the most part, he came to the Century for monthly meetings or concerts. He took no active part in club activities. He was a member for twenty-three years.

Prentice Van Walbeck Duell

In his report for 1959–1960, Centurion Nathan M. Pusey, President of Harvard, writes that Prentice Duell “was believed to have known more than anyone about the pigments used by the early painters of the Mediterranean area.” This knowledge came from his work in Greece and Egypt and especially from his studies of the Etruscan frescoes in Tarquinia. Of these frescoes he made fine copies which he eventually lent to the Fogg Museum at Harvard. He was associated with the museum as Research Fellow in Etruscan art.

An archaeologist by profession and a historian of architecture, he took particular interest in methods and materials. He extended his research of these matters into the Italian Renaissance and lectured at Harvard upon his findings. He also worked on the arrangement of historical art exhibits at the museum. But he did not confine his activities to the Mediterranean. From 1929 to 1931 he took an important part in the restoration of Williamsburg.

Prentice Duell was born in Indiana in 1894, took his A.B. degree at the University of California in 1916, his A.M. a year later at the University of Arizona, and his Master of Architecture at Harvard in 1924. Meanwhile, he had studied architecture in Paris and at the University of Pennsylvania. He had also served as enlisted man in the aviation section of the United States Army and as officer in the American Expeditionary Force in the First World War. In the Saint Mihiel and Argonne offensives and in the Army of Occupation, he was balloon pilot-observer. After the war he was instructor of architecture at the University of Illinois, assistant professor and professor of ancient architecture at the University of Cincinnati, and associate professor of classical architecture at Bryn Mawr College. Later, but before going to the museum at Harvard, he was field director of the Sakkarah Expedition of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. In Egypt he became particularly known for his studies of Mereruka which were published in 1938.

He was a member of the American Institute of Architects and active in the American Academy in Rome and in several Italian professional societies. He was the author of four volumes on architecture and archaeology and of articles in archaeological journals.

He was a Centurion for twenty-seven years, but for a large part of that time his work kept him away from us.

Marion Eppley

A captain in the United States Naval Reserve, Marion Eppley was active in the navy in both world wars. To it he brought a knowledge of chemical research and production and a special understanding of the explosives used in depth charges and torpedoes. In the first war, he supervised experiments with these weapons; in the second, he was Chief of Staff of the Narragansett Group Eastern Sea Frontier and later chief of naval censorship in the Pacific. Through all of his life, his main preoccupation was with science; in addition to his study of chemistry, he knew much about the theories and applications of electricity; he was a Fellow of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and the Franklin Institute honored him for his work on electrical standard cells. To advance the study of chemistry, physics, and biology he founded the Eppley Foundation for research and the Eppley Laboratory, both at Newport, Rhode Island.

A native of West Orange, New Jersey, Marion Eppley prepared for Princeton at Cartaret Academy. On his graduation from college he served briefly as assistant editor of the Scientific American and as managing editor of its Spanish edition. Though for some six years after this he was a partner in a New York brokerage firm, he kept thinking about chemistry and finally went back to Princeton to get his doctorate in that subject. The European war had stimulated his interest in military explosives and, at Princeton, he gave a lecture course in chemistry with this emphasis so that he was well prepared to work with the navy by the time the United States got into the war.

Eppley was a member of many scientific societies both here and in England and the author of many scientific papers. He had been a Centurion for thirty years.

Dana Holman Ferrin

At lunch on Tuesdays, the same group sat at the table in the southwest corner of the dining room. It was called Bill Brewster's table. They were knowledgeable men, as befitted a professor of Brewster's tastes, but they were gay, too—the late well-loved Leonard Bacon whose laughter used to penetrate every corner of the club house was one. And so was Dana Ferrin, known for his quiet Vermont humor as well as for his talent for interesting teachers in textbooks.

Educational publishing was his profession. It is exacting and peripatetic work. Each year he must circulate among the colleges, talking to professors about the new books his house was bringing out. Yet he found time for his two hobbies—golf and the Century. For years, here, he was active on "Stim" and is said to have distinguished himself in the mysterious activities of that committee.

As a boy, Dana Ferrin grew accustomed to being on the move. His father was a Congregational minister who went from one small Vermont town to another as the calls came. But as he grew older Dana was able to attend school at Kimball Union Academy and later went to college at the University of Vermont in Burlington. On his graduation in 1908, he entered the educational department of the Century Company and, for a while, was stationed in Chicago, from which he extended his traveling function. Then he became manager of the department, and when his company merged with D. Appleton and Company he was vice-president of the combined houses. He continued to hold that position after the second merger with F. S. Crofts and Company into the present Appleton-Century-Crofts. In 1952 he was elected president of that house and later, when his son succeeded him as president, he became chairman of the board.

He was a Centurion for thirty years and had many devoted friends in the Club.

Lindley Murray Franklin

Associated with the firm that has meant so much to the Century—McKim, Mead and White—Franklin was best known as a builder of hospitals and churches; in New York, the Brick Presbyterian Church whose pastor is one of our officers is a monument to his skill. Because of his activities as a churchman this kind of design must have been especially congenial to him, but perhaps his greatest expertness was in hospital architecture.

He graduated from Columbia in 1896. From McKim, Mead and White, he went to York and Sawyer, of which, after experimenting with a firm of his own, he became a partner. In New York he built Roosevelt Hospital, in Pittsburgh the Allegheny General Hospital, and in Washington the Department of Commerce building. During the First World War he conducted a review of Army hospital facilities for the Federal Government.

His extra-architectural activities were in Connecticut and Long Island. He was chairman of the Darien Town Plan and Zoning Commission and in Stamford he was a vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church. In Stamford, too, he combined his church and hospital interests, conducting weekly church services at the Wyndover Nursing Home. In Flushing he was a warden of St. George's Church.

Franklin was an emeritus fellow of the American Institute of Architects.

He was one of our senior members, being with us for thirty-six of his eighty-five years.

Charles Fairchild Fuller

Some residents of Stonington, Connecticut, are horrified, others are greatly amused by something that has happened in the last few years on their exceedingly respectable Main Street. There is a church there that is not a church, though it looks from a distance like a church and, only in a close view, a little mockingly so. The visitor is somewhat startled as he enters the grounds by their landscape design (walks and fences done with the aid of barrel heads and staves) and is further surprised at the doorway to see "Go Away" done into the doormat instead of the familiar "Welcome" legend. This might deter the Fuller brush man, but to any friend of this curious structure's owner it was an invitation. Inside it is certainly not a church—though scriptural inscriptions are still on the lofty walls, reminiscent of one-time worship—but the exceedingly comfortable home of the late Charles Fairchild Fuller, architect extraordinary.

If you knew Charlie Fuller you would not be surprised that he had turned an abandoned church into a house to live in because nothing that Charlie Fuller did would surprise you. And you would see in this building and its decoration, a reflection of the wide, irrelevant, and sometimes irreverent fancies that made Charlie such an engaging companion; such stimulating company for long or short association. He was one of those people that you hate to see leave no matter how much you have been together. Charlie never wore out his welcome. He got fun out of everything, even chess, of which he became quite a player because he never took it seriously. We did not see him often enough at the Club—he would be building something in Asia—but when he came it was a red-letter day.

Charlie—or “Chas” as his closest friends used to call him—was educated at Groton, Harvard, and the Columbia School of Architecture. In the First World War he was an ensign in the Naval Air Corps and on the staff of Admiral William S. Sims in London. After studying in France and Italy, he established his own architectural firm in New York. Most of his work was on the design of private houses in the metropolitan area, but he also built the town hall of Islip, Long Island, and the Science Building of the Choate School at Wallingford, Connecticut.

In the Second World War, he served in the Merchant Marine. After the war he worked with the Municipal Housing Commission in New York. Later he was associated with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Jakarta, Indonesia. He also worked with the ECA in Washington. The last time he was at a Century monthly dinner, he talked enthusiastically to a group of us about his Indonesian experiences. Charles Fuller was a Centurion by divine right. Why he was not a member at least twenty years before 1951 is an inscrutable mystery.

John Farquhar Fulton

As a physiologist and historian of medicine John Fulton was internationally respected. Much of his time was spent in England in research, in collaboration with pathologists, biochemists, and bacteriologists, and in laboratory experiment.

In the United States his time was divided between Harvard and Yale. At Harvard he studied; at Yale he taught.

At Oxford, to which he went as a Rhodes Scholar after his graduation from Harvard in 1921, he was associated with some of the pioneers in modern neurophysiological research, a leader of whom was Nobel Prizewinner Sir Charles Sherrington. Sherrington was an early experimenter in the graphic recording of reflex muscular movements. This led to understanding of the importance of the electrical behavior of muscle, later demonstrated by the techniques of electronic amplification of bioelectric currents. During the years he spent at Oxford, after he had won a First in the Honour School in Physiology, Fulton became deeply interested in laboratory work in these directions. In 1923 he was awarded the Christopher Welch scholarship in competitive examination, and this enabled him to win his D.Phil. in 1925.

Of his life in England, he wrote for his twenty-fifth anniversary Harvard class report:

"While trying to adjust myself to an inclement winter, Lady Osler took pity on me and gave me a key to her front door at 13 Norham Gardens, where one found warmth both of house and heart. Sir William, whose remarkable library was still on the shelves, had died the year before."

Through Lady Osler, Fulton met Doctor Harvey Cushing, who had come to Oxford to get material for his biography of Sir William. Cushing persuaded Fulton to take a medical degree before going on with physiology. Accordingly, he returned to America and studied two years in the Harvard Medical School.

"I didn't learn much clinical medicine at Harvard," he wrote, modestly, for the class report, "but a generously disposed committee gave me a degree [M.D.] in 1927. . . .” Actually, he graduated with honors. He then spent a year working with Harvey Cushing as Associate in Neurosurgery.

In 1928 he returned to Oxford to accept a Magdalen College Fellowship. He evidently expected to stay in England for a while as his wife had installed “four bathtubs, central heating, and a few other conveniences . . . in our house and a tennis court and a rose garden outside.” Nevertheless, the call that came from Yale in 1929 was so insistent that he gave up all these things and accepted a professorship which would combine research and teaching at New Haven.

From 1929 to 1951, he was Sterling Professor of Physiology in the Yale Medical School and from 1951, Sterling Professor of the History of Medicine.

Parallel with his laboratory work and other clinical interests, Fulton had become increasingly absorbed in the history and literature of medicine. Altogether he added some four hundred titles in books and articles to the body of this literature and he helped found three medical journals: The Journal of Neurophysiology, The Journal of Neurosurgery, and The Journal of the History of Medicine. An important contribution to medical biography was his Life of Harvey Cushing.

Some of those who worked with John Fulton thought his determination sometimes amounted to stubbornness; others thought he was extravagant in his use of laboratory animals, but alongside the honors heaped upon him by American and foreign universities and by foreign governments these criticisms seem superficial indeed.

John Loomer Hall

Railroad lawyers are often in demand and John Hall was one of the best. He pulled the New Haven out of one of its worst doldrums and those of us who live along its way today wish he might do it again. But he has left us after a full life in which he triumphantly met many a legal crisis.

Though the reorganization of the New Haven and of five western railroads which had made pleas under the Bankruptcy Act and his work as New England counsel for the Pennsylvania are among his more notable achievements, these made only a fraction of the cases in which he won the admiration of his colleagues. It was in trials before a jury that he found his greatest enjoyment. Here he was dealing with a cross section of humanity; there was scope for his sure sense of human and social values and for his humor—which could often convince where an orthodox argument might fail.

The story is told of his cross-examination of the late Governor James M. Curley of Massachusetts, who was suing publishers for an article which was alleged to be libelous. On direct examination, Curley had stated that the article was so vicious that it caused him actual physical pain.

"Where," asked John Hall in cross-examination, "was the pain located?"

"In my head," replied the plaintiff.

"And was the pain," asked Hall, "accompanied by swelling?"

This so amused the jury that, from then on, in the trial, they were unable to take the Governor's claims seriously.

John Hall's circle of friends was wide and his friendships were warm. As he grew older, these were with younger and younger men. Perhaps it was the wide spacing in age of his sons that kept his touch with youth. But his mind was always attractive to young men in and out of his profession. In spite of his conservatism, he was a strong defender of personal liberty: he disapproved of such things as the teacher's oath and the lawyer's oath, which he believed restricted freedom of thought.

He was born in Willimantic, Connecticut, was educated at Williston Academy at Easthampton, Massachusetts, and at Yale. He graduated in 1894 and took his LL.B. at Yale Law School in 1896. Two years later he was admitted to the bar and immediately formed a partnership with the late Charles F. Choate, Jr., a firm which later became Choate, Hall and Stewart. In this Boston firm he remained.

In the late years of his life, the Chief Justice of Massachusetts said there were only two lawyers in the Commonwealth who really had an impact on the court by their mere appearance and that the first of these was John Hall.

Clarence Henry Haring

Harvard men are sometimes teased about what their contemporaries in other institutions of learning call "Harvard indifference." Like many intercollegiate aspersions this one may have little ground in truth. But there is one department of their studies in which Harvard undergraduates—because of remoteness, perhaps—take less than an enthusiastic interest: that is, the history, economics, and sociology of Latin America. Doctor Castro may recently have drawn their attention into the Caribbean, but south of that—well, Cambridge is too far north. As Latin America was the subject to which Clarence Haring was devoted, he found teaching the Harvard undergraduates less rewarding than teaching the graduate students. Among the graduates the views were quite different, and here he trained many historians who could go out and teach Latin American history in other North American universities that were closer to the Rio Grande.

In these studies Clarence Haring was a pioneer. When he began his teaching, he saw ahead to the importance the "good neighbor" countries would one day have to the United States. He broke away, therefore, from the formulas that had kept academic historians conservative in the territory of their historical explorations. Haring's colleagues are said to have referred to the lands in which he broke ground as "unhealthy countries." But they tell today of the revolution he affected in academic outlook.

Clarence Haring was born in Philadelphia in 1885 to a "Pennsylvania Dutch" family. His boyhood summers were spent on a farm. In 1907 Harvard gave him his A.B. summa cum laude in history. In the same year he went as a Rhodes Scholar to Oxford where he took the research degree of B.Litt. He then won his doctorate at Harvard and taught at Bryn Mawr, Clark, and Yale. In 1923 he became the Robert Woods Bliss Professor of Latin American History. Meanwhile, he had published his Oxford thesis, The Buccaneers in the West Indies: Studies in the Seventeenth Century, which won him celebrity.

At Harvard, in those days, the House System was being established and Haring was Master of Dunster House. This post, which he dearly loved, was, of course, an administrative as well as a cultural one and involved social as well as intellectual relations with students and staff. He relaxed, in this time, at the meetings of a small Cambridge dining club to which he contributed, in addition to entertaining talk, a special, unknown brand of cigars that were also fruits of his southern research.

He is thought to have been a kind of cultural ambassador to the Latin American peoples. He spoke fluent Spanish and Portuguese and, in a time of a relatively high-hat attitude among North Americans, was wholly without patronage. He was, naturally, honored by many Latin American scholarly and honorary societies. He was a commander of the Venezuelan Order of the Liberator and received the Serra Award for his contribution to inter-American culture. His best-known books are South America Looks at the United States and Empire in Brazil.

He joined us in the Century thirty years ago.

Charles Lambert Heyniger

It is rare that a man will give up a well-paid job as an officer of one of the world's largest corporations to become a schoolmaster. Yet that is what "Lamb" Heyniger did when, as vice-president of General Motors with the vista of a successful business career stretching before him, he decided that the only thing in the world he really wanted to do was to teach boys to become men. Perhaps it was the memory of his own school days at Lawrenceville that inspired him—days when his giant size, his qualities of heart and mind, his commanding voice, his skills in literature, in music, and in athletics combined to make him a leader there.

Back to Lawrenceville he went, then, when he was over forty, but he had plans in the back of his mind that reached beyond the teaching of English there. What fascinated him most at Lawrenceville, of which the celebrated Centurion Allan Heely was then head, were the problems of the headmaster, and to have a school of his own was his aim.

He found it in New Lebanon, New York, where a small village school was trying to function in old Shaker buildings. Darrow School was precisely the kind of material he wanted to work with and, assisted by a nucleus of highly cooperative boys and some fellow teachers, he built it into a thriving boarding school in which, as headmaster, he spent his life.

Lamb Heyniger and the boys together did the physical work of renovating the old buildings and creating new ones. "In all cases," writes a close Centurion friend, "whether dormitory, dining hall, classroom or gymnasium, these were hefted out of existing Shaker homes, barns, wash-houses, carpenter shops. And these changes were solidly and beautifully achieved through physical labor and downright faith." But parallel with all this work the educational discipline that was the core of Heyniger's endeavor was uninterruptedly carried on. Those who remember the growth of Darrow from fifty boys to three times that number say that in those years of incessant construction, Lamb Heyniger built himself—all six feet seven of him—into the school.

Heyniger was born in 1892 in Corning, New York. He graduated from Lawrenceville in 1912, from Princeton (as a Civil Engineer) in 1916. After a year of teaching in China, he returned to become a captain of the United States Air Service in the First World War. Back from the A. E. F., he entered General Motors as sales executive and remained with the corporation fourteen years, rising there to a vice-presidency. In 1933, he became Secretary of the Industrial Advisory Board, National Recovery Administration, and three years later went to Lawrenceville as assistant to the headmaster.

Heyniger's charm, his massive strength, his perception and sensitivity, his combined profound conviction and great tolerance made him an ideal guide to growing youth as well as a genial companion.

He had friends in the Century who went back with him to early school days. They join in his praise and in sorrow at his going.

Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe

"Lord, we thank thee for the life of Mark Howe; for what he said, what he wrote, what he sang, what he did, and above all for what he was.

Grounded in the simplicities of the good life, he grew naturally and almost inevitably toward the sky. His body, mind, and spirit worked together for good to make something like music out of the assorted materials of life.

He never thought of himself more highly than he ought to think, nor more lowly; he never lost interest in what was going on around him; nor did he ever cease to give pleasure to the people who came his way.

He never asked too many questions, but rested more and more in a few ultimate answers and was willing to risk the rest.

"We who knew him felt that in knowing him we knew what a man is meant to be. Wherefore, as he now joins the larger fellowship of all faithful people we say, Glory be to thee, O Lord, and praised be Thy Name for ever and ever. AMEN"

This was the prayer that was read by its author, Theodore Parker Ferris, at Trinity Church in Boston on December 9, 1960, three days after Mark had left his many friends. A host of Centurions will echo the "Amen."

Mark Howe was born in the week before Sherman captured Atlanta, less than seven months before Appomattox and the end of war. In August, 1960, he was ninety-six—close behind "C.C." Burlingham, the oldest Centurion and his closest friend, who had joined the "Century's Immortals" the year before.

He took his bachelor's degree at Lehigh University in 1886 but he went, inevitably, to Harvard for his M.A. It is difficult to think of Howe apart from Harvard, so closely was he identified with it in later years. In 1888 he became associate editor of The Youth's Companion and five years later joined the staff of the Atlantic Monthly. In 1913 he took on the editorship of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin and soon after became editor of the Harvard Graduates' Magazine. For six years also in this period he was a Harvard Overseer.

His interest centered, in all this time, round Boston and Cambridge. He was a trustee of the Boston Atheneum for twenty-five years and became its director in 1933. Meanwhile, however, he had been consultant in biography at the Library of Congress and visiting scholar at the Huntington Library in San Marino, California.

Howe was the author of fifteen books. The best-known of these was his biography, Barrett Wendell and His Letters, for which he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1924. But there was also his autobiography, A Venture in Remembrance, which told of his seventy-five years of editorial work and the authors he had dealt with, among them Jack London, John Jay Chapman, and Robert Frost.

The philosopher Alfred North Whitehead once nominated Mark Howe as the ideal man to represent the human race on a mission to Mars.

In an article in the Atlantic in December, 1953, entitled "Nearing Ninety," Howe recalled a poem he had once written:

*Now, thieving time, take what you must—
Quickness to move, to hear, to see.
When dust is drawing near to dust
Such diminution need must be.
Yet leave O leave exempt from plunder
My curiosity, my wonder.*

These he kept while he lived, reading constantly through his last years and listening to music at the Boston Symphony. When "time" took away his "quickness to see," he was still able to enjoy books through recordings made by the Library of Congress. In his last year he "read" some thirty of these "Talking Books."

When he left us, Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe had been a Centurion thirty years. It is hard to see him go, but, like Theodore Ferris, we thank the Lord that we have known him.

Francis Anthony Jamieson

Frank Jamieson grew up in an atmosphere of politics. His brother, father, and grandfather were all active in the Democratic party in New Jersey. His own political beginnings were in the Democratic camp. That he ultimately became confidential adviser and public relations man for a Republican governor was evidence of his (and the Governor's) independent views which have often cut across rigid party lines.

This last office grew out of his close association with Centurion Nelson Rockefeller during the last war. In Rockefeller's office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Jamieson was head of the Washington press division, one of whose functions was to stand between Axis propaganda and its Latin American targets. He was so successful in parrying these attacks and in his general direction of the division that he won the entire confidence of his chief—to such a point, in fact, that he became Rockefeller's successor in the agency.

Frank Jamieson began life as a newspaperman. He did not go to college. After his formal education had ended with graduation from the Trenton High School in 1922, he entered the Kelly News Service at the New Jersey State House, then went on to serve on the staffs of various New Jersey papers. In 1929, he joined the staff of the Associated Press State House bureau and was soon its chief. His first great journalistic achievement was the Lindbergh kidnapping story in the spring of 1932, for which he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize. But even this high level of reporting could not hold him forever. He had seen enough of politics both at home and in Washington to convince him that that was where his deepest interest lay.

He went back into political activity along the avenue of public relations. His first training was in the fund-raising enterprises of John Price Jones. After five years in the Jones office he felt confident of his ability to manage the publicity for a political campaign and this he did when Charles Edison ran successfully on the Democratic ticket for governor of New Jersey. This was in 1940.

After the war, he became public relations adviser to the Rockefeller brothers. When Nelson ran for governor of New York he planned much of the campaign strategy. After the successful election, the Governor officially appointed him his special adviser. Unfortunately his career in that post was soon interrupted by the beginnings of the illness which carried him away little more than a year later.

At the Century, most of us did not have a chance to know Frank Jamieson. He was a member less than ten years, and, in that time, came only occasionally to the club. A Centurion friend writes of him:

"He was an observer of life and of politics of remarkable astuteness. He was full of humor and devoid of the acidity which sometimes accompanies a capacity for acute observation. He was amazingly tolerant of all except the people he considered stuffy. His circle of friends was small, but to those whom he honored with his friendship his devotion and loyalty were outstanding."

Bassett Jones

The Century clubhouse is full of reminders of departed Centurions. There are paintings, works of sculpture, and books. The loggia is a memorial to Larry White; so is the whole clubhouse to Larry's father. The monument to Bassett Jones is the elevator.

It is a far cry from the elevators in the Empire State building, which can rise at the rate of 2,500 feet per minute and are so far beyond human control that they must be regulated by push-button mechanisms, to the little car at the Century, which can just hold five Centurions before lunch and only four after. Yet Bassett Jones designed them both.

There was, however, a difference in his approach. He heartily disapproved of Empire State and all its skyscraper kin; with all his heart, he approved of the Century. We shall remember him as long as his lift eases our aging hearts, and we shall miss him, too.

We are accustomed to men of many talents. Yet the variety and extent of Bassett's unrelated gifts challenge even a Centurian imagination. Making fast elevators used only a small corner of his mind. He was a botanist, an ichthyologist, a sailor, a student of arctic exploration, an expert in theatrical production, an economist, a mathematician, and a philosopher. By profession he was a mechanical and electrical engineer and a master in the technics of illumination. His material success came from freezing fish.

Bassett Jones was born on Staten Island in 1877. As a boy he fell in love with Nantucket, where the Jones family went in the summer. Bassett, Senior, was a dendrologist: trees were his specialty and there were none on Nantucket—none at least on the east coast where the storms blew the salt spray far ashore. Mr. Jones knew that a pine that grew on the island of Hokkaido in Japan could survive these attacks so he asked a Japan-going friend to bring back some seeds. These he planted, and when he died the young trees became young Bassett's protégés.

The boy went to Stevens Institute in Hoboken to study engineering. He was expelled for "conspiracy"—a term which covered insubordinations—and he went to M.I.T. The engineering curriculum there seemed to him inadequate; there were no humanities. He did not graduate because he was forever cutting the technical courses to sneak off to Harvard to listen to his beloved Professor Royce interpret philosophy.

Bassett had the kind of mind that could study engineering only if it were balanced by some study of mankind. So, degree or no, he was able with the assistance of a philosopher to master the technical complexities.

For five years after he left M.I.T. he wore overalls and moved up from the bottom. He fired boilers, worked at open-hearth furnaces, was an operator in power plants, trained himself to be an expert carpenter, pipefitter, and machinist. His pay at the end of this self-imposed apprenticeship was $12.50 a week. By this time he had learned all that a skilled worker should know and all of a worker's problems. He got a job then as supervising engineer for the firm of Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown and Company in New York. Several years later, in his own firm of Meyer, Strong and Jones, he undertook the installation of lighting systems and elevators in skyscrapers.

Meanwhile, the Japanese black pines on Nantucket had grown into sturdy, spray-resistant trees, and Bassett found time not only for tree-breeding for other storm-swept places but also for much fishing off Nantucket. One day Clarence Birdseye, who had the idea of preserving fish by quick-freezing, came to see him. Bassett was so taken by the project that he forgot about lights and elevators, enlisted some friends, and put his money and theirs into the enterprise which became the General Foods Company. He was the first president of this company and persuaded his engineer partners to invest in it so that, according to Centurion Geoffrey Hellman's profile in the New Yorker, "the firm of Meyer, Strong and Jones suddenly found itself practically in the fish business."

His neglect of his main profession as illuminating engineer was, however, temporary. Centurions remember the talk he gave at the club about his work with Maude Adams in stage lighting. Miss Adams, he said, was an intuitive engineer. Together they worked out the first flood-lighting with incandescent filament ever used in the theatre and, with the active cooperation of General Electric, completely revolutionized stage illumination.

In 1937, when the plans for the 1939 New York World's Fair got under way, his friend Stephen Voorhees, chairman of the Fair's Board of Design, invited Bassett to become consultant on illumination. He accepted, and it was soon evident that "consultant" with him was synonymous with full-time creative worker. Though fluorescent lighting was still in an experimental stage he insisted on its use throughout the fair and this brought it quickly out of its testing period.

By this time he had "retired," which meant that he worked harder than ever and in more directions at once. On Nantucket, along with pines and fish, he delved deeply into economics and proved, at least to his own satisfaction, that money was a fiction, that it had no real existence, that bankers and financiers merely passed numbers around. He wrote several books that disturbed those who for years had handled money as tangible material. Price indexes he called arithmetical rubbish. His book Horses and Apples exposed the nonsense of trying to add or multiply these commodities with each other and the last years of his life were spent on a work entitled Numbers Called Money, which is said to have scared economists and publishers alike.

Bassett was at the Century almost daily in non-Nantucket seasons and every day he brought a new idea to fascinate the habitués of the round table. His energy to the last was so constant that we could not believe it when he left us. We don't quite believe it yet.

Clyde Kay Maben Kluckhohn

There is a fragment of Navajo poetry that is appropriate to the return, for the last time, of Clyde Kluckhohn to the land of the people he loved:

*Happily this day I go now
To dwell in the land of my youth
With beauty before me and behind me
With beauty above me and below me
With beauty all around me
In beauty it is finished
In beauty it is finished.*

He ranged far and wide in his uncommonly rich life but the Navajo Indians remained his first interest and his closest attachment. They formed the central focus of his study as an anthropologist, and this study made him a first authority for consultation by the Interior Department's Indian Service. But he was also an authority on Russia, a classicist, and an accomplished linguist—perfectly at home not only in Greek and Latin but in French, German, and Italian. It is said that he was familiar enough with Sanskrit "to confound his examiner." In addition to all this he was a wise museum curator and one of Harvard's most valued professors.

These things sound austere; Kluckhohn was anything but. No one liked a good story more or told one better than he. A friend tells that "his store of limericks was inexhaustible and he would recite them with increasing gusto as the glasses were filled and emptied and refilled." At one time he formed a dining club composed of "serious fellows who refused to take themselves seriously" and he gave it a Sanskrit name which was said to be untranslatable—at least in mixed company.

Clyde Kluckhohn was born in Le Mars, Iowa. His education at Princeton was interrupted by illness and he went to a ranch in New Mexico to recuperate. It was here that he first became interested in the Navajo Indians and even learned to speak their language, which he described as "incredibly difficult." He then went to the University of Wisconsin, where he majored in Greek. He was chosen to be a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford in 1928. After much travel in Europe he became Assistant Professor of Anthropology at the University of New Mexico and an Associate in Archaeology at the School of American Research in Santa Fé. In 1936 Harvard made him assistant professor and ten years later he became full professor. In this time he spent his vacations in New Mexico and Arizona with the Navajo and Hopi Indians.

He was in Military Intelligence in the Second World War and served also in the Office of War Information. After the war he organized and directed the new Russian Research Center at Harvard and made it one of the best sources in the country for information on the Soviet Union.

He was the author of To the Foot of the Rainbow and Beyond the Rainbow. The Navajo, Children of the People, Personality in Nature, Society and Culture, Navajo also Means People, and How the Soviet System Works were written in collaboration.

Centurions who knew him were sorry that he was a member for so short a time, for they were sure he would have come to love it and would have made devoted friends. But at the age when most of us become most attached to our club, he died. He was only fifty-five when he left us.

Alexander Douglas Knox

A friend said of Sandy Knox that though his sensitivity was expressed in surprising but engaging shyness, he found great enjoyment in good talk, good food, good wine, and generally genial companionship. There was a gentleness, a delicacy about him that seemed to savor of the nineteenth century, yet his architectural tastes and slants were of the mid-twentieth.

Knox graduated from Harvard in 1923; he returned to Harvard after studying architecture at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris to take his master's degree in 1927. He became a partner in the firm of LaFarge, Knox and Murphy, where he specialized in the design of large and often luxurious dwellings. This work took him as far afield as the Caribbean. There were, for example, Cameel Bay Plantation and Estate Good Hope in the Virgin Islands. But he also turned his hand to commercial design when he undertook the British Overseas Airways Corporation building at the Idlewild International Airport.

The joy and mastery of his craft, however, culminated in his own summer pavilion overlooking Sagaponack Pond at Bridgehampton, Long Island. This stands as a memorial to the side of his nature that complemented his architecture—the friendship side. Here the pavilion—of gay, almost frivolous design—expresses the fun and friendship he savored around him at home and in the Century.

In 1945 he received a master's degree in city and regional planning from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He was a member of the American Institute of Architects and the Architectural League of New York.

He was a member of the Century for twenty-two years. He died before his time at fifty-nine.

Russell Cornell Leffingwell

A Centurion colleague says of "RCL" that he "was all of a piece, a great gentleman whose courtesy was bred in the bone." He was as American as any we have; his tree goes back to the Connecticut wilderness of 1637 where Thomas Leffingwell was a friend of Indians and their beneficiary. Mohegan Sachem Uncas gave Thomas a grant in perpetuity of the entire town of Norwich as a reward for smuggling food to him when he was besieged by the hostile Narragansetts. On the other side, RCL came from nine generations of American Cornells.

Russell Leffingwell was a lawyer, a banker, and a public servant. In the First World War he combined the talents which made him a leader in all three activities: he financed the war. When President Wilson appointed him Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of fiscal affairs, he set up the Liberty Loans and organized the nation's effort to raise the money; he also arranged the War Loans to our Allies.

He was born in New York in 1878, graduated from Yale in 1899, and took his law degree at Columbia in 1902. He began the practice of law with the firm of Guthrie, Cravath and Henderson, and later became a partner in the firm's successor, Cravath, Henderson, Leffingwell and de Gersdorff. After his work in international finance in the war, he was invited to become the partner of Centurion J. Pierpont Morgan (the second) and remained with J. P. Morgan and Company and the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company all his life. From 1923 to 1948 he rose to chairmanship of the firm, succeeding Centurion Thomas Lamont.

At the bar, Russell distinguished himself in general corporate law. Perhaps he is best remembered for his handling of the intricate Reading case, in the early 1920's, after the Supreme Court had ordered the railroad to divest itself of its coal properties.

His interest in the ramifications of international finance led to his becoming a charter member of the Council on Foreign Relations. From 1927 he served on its Board of Directors; he was the Council's President in 1944, and two years later became Chairman of the Board.

He did not come often to the Century, but he came consistently through the years, and he was a faithful attendant at the dinners of the Economic Group. He loved the Century and was a Centurion for exactly half of his long life. He was elected when he was forty-one; he died at eighty-two.

Harry Miller Lydenberg

Harry Lydenberg could scarcely remember a time when he was not, in some capacity, connected with a library. At fourteen, when he was not at Dayton's Central High School, he worked as a page in the Dayton Public Library. At Harvard, the study which won him, in three years, his A.B. degree summa cum laude did not prevent him from assisting in the college library—work which incidentally helped finance his education but, more important, helped prepare him for his long, useful librarian career. It is a remarkable record of holding to a line; from childhood Harry Lydenberg knew where he was going and without deviation he went there.

Out of college a year ahead of his class, twenty-two years old, he got a job in the New York Public Library. Within three years he was assistant to the Director. The present building at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street was then in the planning stage, and with its plans Lydenberg was mainly concerned. When the building was completed, he was responsible for the transfer of the books from the Lenox and Astor Libraries and their installation in the stacks of their new home. By 1908 he was Chief Reference Librarian.

The general public knows little of the minute detail involved in the building of a research collection. No apparently ephemeral scrap having any bearing on the subject of the collection can be overlooked. Pamphlets, broadsides, clippings, letters, notebooks, old dinner menus, even grocery bills and check stubs must be examined, filed, and indexed. Any one of these, however trivial, may be a missing link to a biographer or historian—establishing a date or supplying some forgotten evidence of an event. To evaluate these, to arrange them, and to make them available to the research student requires not only a rare mentality but gifts of an extremely personal kind. The tact, for instance, that must deal with the man or woman for whom research is an end rather than a means is not an intellectual property. It is not only intuitive; its presence is a symptom of emotional stability.

It was the combination of these talents plus a memory storehouse of infinite proportions that made Harry Lydenberg a great librarian. While he commanded the reference division, his extensive acquaintance among collectors of all sorts encouraged many valuable donations such as the Spencer Collection of Illustrated Books, the Berg Collection of English and American Literature, and the Phelps Collection of American Historical Prints. He had special concern for the bibliographical growth of the central reference library but he also gave much time to the expansion of the branch library lending system.

In 1934 he was appointed Director of the New York Public Library. His retirement from that position in 1941 by no means meant a withdrawal from strenuous library activity. From New York he went to Mexico City, where he organized the Biblioteca Benjamin Franklin sponsored by the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and the American Library Association. In his off time, his favorite recreation was mountain climbing—a rugged exercise for a man approaching seventy. After two years in Mexico, he became Director of the American Library Association's Board on International Relations, and in 1946 he was a member of the Library of Congress Purchasing Mission to Germany. In 1949, after his final retirement, he received the Joseph W. Lippincott award for his outstanding library work of nearly fifty years.

In 1943 the New York Public Library published a book in Lydenberg's honor. It was entitled Bookman's Holiday: Notes and Studies Written and Gathered in Tribute to Harry Miller Lydenberg. The contributors include Henry Mencken, Victor Hugo Paltsits, Archibald MacLeish, Royal Cortissoz, and Frank Weitenkampf. Among these papers are such recollections and tributes as "A Great Administrator," "A Builder of Library Research Collections," "Bookman," "Friend," and "A Whole Man."

Working so near, he was naturally a frequent visitor to the Century. We are proud to have had him with us for more than thirty years.

Robert Thompson McCracken

Bob McCracken, as he was known to his friends, was said to have contributed as much to the Philadelphia community as any other Philadelphian in the last fifty years. He was intensely concerned with the elimination of waste and corruption from the city government; he helped to found the Greater Philadelphia movement, which enlisted the support of prominent business and civic leaders toward municipal reform and the city's growth. He was one of the key men in the drafting of the Philadelphia City Charter, a document which had certain unique characteristics in its pioneer directions for a strong mayor and a strong city council type of city government which followed the form of a national or state government.

Close to his heart was the University of Pennsylvania, of which he was a life trustee. He was interested not only in the university's educational program but, too, in its attitude toward the racial question. As evidence of his strong opposition to discrimination in the student body, he supported the introduction of the first Negro football player on Franklin Field. From this time on, the campus knew no attempts at segregation. He acted in this matter as he did in all controversial issues, making no pronouncements which might inflame either side but moving persistently and effectively in accordance with his own deep convictions about freedom and the dignity of man.

McCracken was born in Philadelphia in 1883. He was educated at the Philadelphia Central High School and the University of Pennsylvania, in which he won a B.S. in 1905 and LL.B. in 1908. He was then admitted to the Pennsylvania Bar and began the practice of law in Philadelphia, becoming a partner in the firm of Montgomery, McCracken, Walker and Rhoads. In 1935 he was chairman of the Committee of Professional Ethics and Grievances of the American Bar Association and three years later was president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association.

He was greatly interested in the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which he was a lay leader. He was rector's warden and a member of the vestry of St. Peter's Church in Germantown for many years. He was also for twelve years chancellor of the Pennsylvania Diocese of the Church.

He was a director of many companies—the Pennsylvania Railroad among others.

Robert Bush McGraw

A psychiatrist who spends his energies in the recovery of other men's minds and souls must find change and relaxation for himself, else he too would go mad. Robert McGraw found it in a garden. He was proud of his garden: he tended it with rare manual skill and wide horticultural knowledge plus the greenest of thumbs. And these activities endeared him to the friends whom he was always inviting to his Connecticut summer home to see the beauty he had evolved and to drink the cider and the wine he had made from his own apples and grapes.

McGraw was a pioneer in the field of psychosomatic therapy; he wrote many professional papers on this subject. He was Clinical Professor of Psychiatry at Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons. For a time he was President of the New York Psychiatric Society and also of the Alumni Society of Bellevue Hospital. He especially valued (as he did, too, his membership in the Century) his association with the Vidonian Club, a small dining club composed of doctors dedicated to his specialty.

Doctor McGraw was concerned that psychiatrists and medical doctors should not draw apart and he was instrumental in forming the "Group for the Preservation of Medical Standards in Psychiatry." He also established the first psychiatric consultation services at the Presbyterian Medical Center and he helped found a psychiatric service for children. At the Constitution Clinic which, with the late Doctor George Draper, he organized, he conducted studies on the peptic ulcer.

McGraw was born in upstate New York in 1897 of a family which had lived in Cortland for many generations. Cortland, indeed, is a neighbor of the town of McGraw. As a young man he went with his parents to England and here he got his secondary education. When he returned to America he went to Cornell. He graduated in 1918 and took his doctorate at the Cornell Medical School in 1921. His early training was at Bellevue Hospital and the Westchester division of the New York Hospital in White Plains.

Robert McGraw's friends tell that a second "garden" of relaxation was the Century. Like so many of us he felt that once he crossed our threshold the tensions dropped away, and with his many friends who worked in other pastures he could find diversion. Those who knew him here and cherished his friendship felt that he left them far too soon.

John Phillips Marquand

A Centurion fan of John's—and there were many—once lent his gardener a copy of a Marquand novel. In a few weeks, the gardener brought it back.

"Well, how did you like it?" he was asked.

"I didn't."

"But why?"

"Well, sir, you see, it made me mad."

"Made you mad?"

"Yes, sir. It made me mad because it was all about me."

John's books made many a reader squirm—less gardeners, as a rule, than their bosses. Yet this anecdote refutes the common belief that his insight into people did not go beneath the upper crust. His observation was not confined. Not only the elite of Boston and the Westchester suburbs winced at his ruthless penetration into their delinquent thought but so did gardeners and generals.

To those who followed his career from its earliest days, John was a literary phenomenon. The instant success, a year or so after he finished college, of his stories in the popular magazines and his first romantic novels branded him as a contriver of plot and a juggler of circumstance.

His literary contemporaries wrote him off, then, as just another "slick" writer. It was a pity, they said, because he had shown promise. Some of his true talent, they said, showed through even the most formulated of his potboilers, but this kind of writing would soon corrupt what gifts he might have. They said these things for about fifteen years—writing folk were more snobbish in the twenties than they are in the sixties—and then, one day, John stunned them into silence.

There was no evidence of corruption in The Late George Apley. Nothing quite like it had ever before been written by an American “slick” storyteller. It was hailed by the most serious critics. It won the Pulitzer Prize. And it produced an earthquake under Beacon Hill from which Boston has never quite recovered.

The first tremors of this appeared in the Boston Transcript. “The Late George Apley,” said its reviewer, in the Transcript’s dry, withering manner, “either as fact or fiction, is perhaps not so impressively truthful as its author intended to make it when he sought to dissect the flesh and lay bare the bones of Boston.” So Bostonian was this review that it might have been taken verbatim from the book. But, at the other end of the New Haven Railroad, the New York Times wrote that it was a “deeply understanding piece of work, a valuable bit of research not only of a period, but research into the springs of humanity itself. . . .” and Centurion Bernard De Voto wrote in the Saturday Review of Literature that it was “crowded with delights, a continuous satisfaction that sometimes rises to ecstasy.” In any event it won the Pulitzer Prize and the faces of many of John’s friends were red.

Yet no one was more aware of his early potboiling than he. In a later Harvard class report he confessed that “financial pressure” was responsible and “caused me to do a lot of hasty work, which I would be glad, if I could, to scratch off the books.” This pressure, to be sure, was quickly relieved, for his first success was what his colleagues called “fantastic.” Oddly enough, even greater relief came from

The Late George Apley and the remarkable studies of scene and character that followed in his other novels. These were Wickford Point, H. M. Pulham, Esq., Point of No Return, B. F.'s Daughter, and So Little Time. Melville Goodwin, U.S.A. was the best of all and perhaps the best picture of an American general ever written. Here, John got completely out of what critics were pleased to call his "rut" and its very faults made it the finest job he ever did.

No more perceptive word has been said of John than what Centurion J. Donald Adams wrote in his Times Book Review page.

"The most obvious thing to say about John Marquand," said Adams, "is at the same time the least understood fact about him. That is the love he had for what he satirized. . . ."

In this respect, Adams said, he resembled Sinclair Lewis. But no one can read his novels without feeling the affection he had for those he made the most fun of and those who were the targets of his most sharply barbed satirical weapons.

Though he wrote of other regions, John was born in Wilmington in 1893. Early in his boyhood he went to Newburyport, Massachusetts. He felt there the first sense of frustration that later was inherent in everything he wrote. He was too poor to go to the famous private schools attended by all his contemporaries. This sort of thing was far more important to boys early in the century than it is today. Actually, the public schools at Newburyport were probably as good or better than the "prep" institutions about which he dreamed. In any case, the same sort of frustration came at Harvard, where he found himself continually associated with rich boys.

Although he had a quick, sensitive sense of humor and fun and could have as good a time as anyone, John was deeply an unhappy man. "I've been so warped and conditioned by life," he once said, "that I haven't found anything that will satisfy me." He blamed "life" but it was his own restless self, searching always, like many creative persons, for a remote ideal, that really caused his discomfort.

In the First World War he served as a first lieutenant of artillery in the A.E.F. and participated in the Marne-Aisne, Saint Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne actions. He came home a captain. His first job was as a newspaper reporter. He had a brief experience as a copywriter in an advertising agency and soon achieved there "what he mildly termed a negative reaction toward the routine of creative selling." He began to write in 1921 and remained all his life a professional writer. Incidentally, he traveled all over the world, and became an intimate not only of top military brass but of tycoon industrialists. All this was grist to his mill. In the Second World War he was a special consultant to the Secretary of War and a Navy war correspondent. Because of his knowledge of organic chemistry, he did much classified work in chemical warfare research.

John truly loved the Century. He served on the Committee on Admissions and took part in other club activities. On the 15th of July, he had lunch at the long table. He was never more entertaining: men gathered round him to hear his stories—for there never was a better raconteur. His face was alight with pleasure; he was robust in health and had kept his figure better than most of his age.

That night, in his sleep, he died.

Howard Harris Mason

Sometimes the diffident teacher is the best: reluctant to impose his own views and never insisting on them but listening attentively to the discussions his very reluctance arouses. Such a teacher was the distinguished pediatrician, Howard Mason. But he asked searching questions of his students, drawing them out, which is the true intent of education whether it is in medicine or the liberal arts. In his research he followed the same pattern—submitting hypotheses for consideration and offering a tentative plan of investigation in the form of a question.

Howard Mason was born in Providence, Rhode Island, in 1878. After his graduation from Brown University in 1900, he spent four years at the college of Physicians and Surgeons in New York and took his doctor's degree there in 1904. On the house staff of Presbyterian Hospital and later, briefly, at the Sloane Hospital for Women, he developed the main interest of his life—the health of infants and children. This led him naturally into an apprenticeship as assistant to Doctor L. Emmett Holt. In 1913, as assistant visiting physician to the children's division of Presbyterian, he began his long career in pediatrics. When Babies Hospital became the pediatric service of the Medical Center in 1930, he joined the attending staff and was appointed Clinical Professor of Diseases of Children, the post which gave him his teaching opportunity.

He was known as a doctor's doctor because so much of his private practice was devoted to the treatment of his colleagues' children. One of them writes that "my most vivid recollection of him and our love for him was because he took care of our children for slight and very serious illness. We came to know him not only as our pediatrician, but as one of our closest friends, one of the most precious we ever had. His robust and contagious laugh so often relieved our anxiety.

"I am sure that Howard Mason took care of more children in doctors' families than any pediatrician in New York . . . and of course without compensation but with friendship and gladness."

Another, telling of his relations with colleagues, says, "He was always generous in his interpretations, never indulging in derogatory criticism, much less in ridicule. Disapproval was usually expressed in silence. . . . His approval, on the other hand, was warmly felt. He had a keen sense of humor and . . . his hearty laugh ringing through the staff dining room was one of his most vivid attributes."

Although he did not begin laboratory research until he was fifty-seven, he was remarkably productive. His special interest was in problems of carbohydrate metabolism in insulin-resistant diabetes and he wrote an important paper on glycogen storage disease.

Mason was very much an outdoor man. He was an expert fly-fisherman and he had wide knowledge of ornithology. It was said that his love of nature was reflected in his approach to therapy. From his study of wild animals, he acquired a belief in their innate healing powers which he knew were present in his young patients as well.

Howard Mason was a member of the Century for more than thirty years. Unfortunately, as with many doctors, he was too busy to be with us much.

Arthur Wilson Page

"He always gave the impression of having plenty of time; he always seemed relaxed, almost casual." This was one Centurion's impression of Arthur Page. The fact that he was an important executive in a large corporation made no difference. He was the opposite of the typical high-strung businessman who drums on the desk and keeps looking at his watch, making any visitor feel that he must say what he has to say fast for the next one is waiting just outside the door. With Arthur, the impression of casualness was "strengthened by the way he looked, the way he dressed and the way he held his pipe. He was a comfortable looking man. His clothes were somewhat tweedy, and just a little baggy, his hat old and worn, and his pipe well used."

Along with all these things, Arthur Page had a gift so rare that none of us has known more than a handful of men who had it. He made everyone who talked to him feel important. Perhaps it was his quick, ready, and total attention to what you were saying that made you feel so wise—your counsel so valuable. Many a man went from his office with new confidence and new energy because Arthur Page had listened to him.

Page was successively editor, public-relations vice-president, and government consultant. He was born in Aberdeen, North Carolina, and went to Harvard. He graduated from college in 1905 and entered the publishing house of Doubleday, Page and Company. His father, Walter Hines Page, was then editor of World's Work, a job he gave up when he was appointed Ambassador to the Court of St. James's. When he left, Arthur took it on. He remained at the editorial desk from 1913 to 1927. Then American Telephone and Telegraph Company offered him a vice-presidency.

The task there was public relations, though maybe it wasn't called that then. In any case it was work for which he was ideally suited. He had the prime requisite, imagination. But he had, too, common sense; it has been said of him that "he made a business of common sense." One thing that he insisted on as a policy was that "if a large corporation got into difficulties which could result in bad news, the sensible thing to do was to tell all about it publicly before anybody else had a chance to do so and distort the facts."

Despite the demands of his position, Page had two opportunities for public service. One was in 1930 when he served as adviser to the United States delegation at the London Naval Conference. The other was in 1945 when he was appointed a temporary special consultant in public relations to the Secretary of War.

In 1947 he retired from A.T. and T. But he was not destined for a life of leisure. A committee was formed to study national transportation for a report to President Eisenhower; Page was chosen to head it. His work on this led him to be engaged as project director for the Metropolitan Rapid Transit Commission.

With these responsibilities continuing after his retirement from business, he still found time to come often to the Century, where he had been welcome for thirty-seven years.

Sidney Painter

If any part of the human record ever needed "debunking" and an original approach, it was medieval history. Sidney Painter saw through the rosy, romantic mist that for most of us, in our school days, overhung the Middle Ages in England and France. He taught and wrote realistically of people and events in the reigns of Henry II, Richard I, John, and Henry III; one got the impression from his books and lectures that he had been the personal friend of such men as William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke; Robert Fitzwalter; Peter des Roches; and Stephen Langton. As a Centurion friend tells us, "He knew their families, their fiefs, their personal histories, their marital intrigues, their ambitions, and how these matters fitted into the great pattern of mediaeval England." On a television program called "Knight Life," he deflated the popular concept of knightly courtliness by showing that many knights were avaricious and brutal—at least until their women had tamed them. In his book on the reign of King John, he even found new things to say about Magna Carta.

Sidney Painter was born in New York City in 1902, prepared for Yale at the Taft School, and took his bachelor's degree at Yale in 1925. After three years as instructor at Yale he received his doctorate and was assistant professor of history there until 1931. He then went to Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore as associate professor and became a full professor and chairman of the history department.

Dressed in tweeds, smoking his pipe, never hurrying, stopping often as he walked across the Homewood campus to talk to the many students who were his friends, he was a popular professor. But for all his apparently easy-going manner and his humorous view of some of the historic characters of his period, he was a meticulous worker and a tireless searcher into the detail of his field. He traveled widely and was a visiting lecturer at several European universities. He was also an active author; among his books were A History of the English Feudal Barony, The Reign of King John, The Rise of Feudal Monarchies, Mediaeval Society, and A History of the Middle Ages.

Academic necessity made him a non-resident member of our association, but for him, the Century was his New York home. Whenever he was in the city, he spent as many hours as he could in the club. The Century came naturally to him as had the little club in Baltimore, "14 West Hamilton Street," which has much of the Century's color.

Sidney Painter was a native Centurion. His friends believe he should have come to us (officially) long before he did. And there can be no doubt that he left us far too soon. He was in his prime when his heart failed; a young man as Century ages go, with the prospect of many productive and friendly years ahead. We knew him briefly but we are proud to have him among our immortals.

John Musser Pearce

John Pearce had been a member of the Century for only seven years when a tragic accident by drowning ended his distinguished career. In that brief time, however, he had become greatly attached to the club in which his father, Richard Pearce, and his colleague, Chandler Foot, had both been members. He especially enjoyed the monthly meetings when his exceedingly exigent profession let him come to them, and he rarely missed an exhibition in the art gallery.

Doctor Pearce was a pathologist. He was also a teacher of surgical pathology to the New York Hospital residents as they rotated through his laboratory. His guidance here and in the operating rooms was immensely valuable to the young men who were headed for a surgical career, for he combined wisdom with friendliness. His answers to the most complex clinical problems presented by the staff were usually accepted as the final word; he often went beyond pathological diagnosis into the probable ensuing clinical course.

Doctor Pearce was born in New York City in 1908. He received his bachelor's degree from Yale in 1930 and his doctorate from the Harvard Medical School four years later. His internship was at the Presbyterian Hospital in New York, and there, too, he had his resident training in pathology. For a year he worked in the Princeton division of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and then was appointed Associate Professor of Pathology in the Long Island College of Medicine. In 1948 he came to the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center as Professor of Pathology and Professor of Pathology in Surgery, Surgical Pathologist, and Attending Pathologist. As Surgical Pathologist he succeeded Centurion Chandler Foot, who entertained us for many a warm evening with his accordion.

His favorite fun was gardening at his summer place in Dorset, Vermont, where he spent most of his vacations. It was on the first day of a spring holiday, however, that he was drowned at Sanibel Island in Florida. He was just past fifty.

George Walbridge Perkins

To political folk who think along rigid partisan lines, George Perkins must have seemed something of a paradox. A Republican by heredity and environment, his major public service was done under a Democratic administration and as the appointee of a Democratic chief executive. But like his distinguished father, George was an original and independent thinker, conforming to no formula, political or otherwise. He was, for instance, a strong advocate of the containment of Communism, yet he favored American recognition of Communist China and American support for Communist Yugoslavia. His friendly conversations with Tito were, however, in accord with Tito's opposition to Soviet policies and Stalinist aims. But his views in all these directions must have been tempered by active service in two wars and were certainly the result of long study of international relations.

He was born in Riverdale, the Bronx, in 1895. He graduated from Princeton in 1917 and immediately enlisted in the Army. He served as private, supply sergeant, and second lieutenant of field artillery in the A.E.F. and the Army of Occupation. His first work after the war was fund raising for Princeton, then as executor for his father's extensive estate. In 1921 he came to know the Merck family and married the sister of the late Centurion George Merck. He became increasingly interested in the Merck pharmaceutical company and was made executive vice-president of that corporation in 1927. Meanwhile he had served as executive secretary to Postmaster General Hays and as assistant treasurer of the Republican State Committee of New York.

In the Second World War he served as a colonel of the chemical warfare branch of the Army in both the European and Pacific theatres. For his exceptional work in this service, he was awarded the Legion of Merit decoration. At war's end he returned to Merck and Company. He left the company in 1948 to accept an appointment as director of the industry division of the Economic Administration in Paris. In 1949, President Truman made him Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs, a post he held till 1953. Two years later, President Eisenhower appointed him United States Permanent Representative with the rank of Ambassador on the Council of NATO.

An institution to which George Perkins was especially devoted was the Palisades Interstate Park Commission. The park had been his father's idea and George had been a member of the Commission since his father's death. He gave it constant thought and attention and, for the last fifteen years, when he served as its president, he kept closely in touch with the park's development and took the lead in pressing for the funds made available by the state to this unique recreational area. Even when he was Ambassador to NATO he watched park affairs and occasionally flew back for an inspection and conference.

He was completely dedicated in his public service. Calm, reserved in his judgment, he had the deep respect of those who worked with him.

Kenneth Reid

Many a periodical is read by those in the upper echelons of the architectural profession, but the student, the apprentice, the draftsman in the architectural office—especially the worker who was studying at night in the country's various ateliers—needed a journal especially geared to such learners. The want was supplied by Pencil Points, which became Progressive Architecture under the editorial aegis of Kenneth Reid.

The program of the student ateliers was established by the Beaux Arts Institute of Design, founded by Centurion Lloyd Warren and for which many Centurions acted as "Patron" or Instructor—among them the late Paul Cret, Arthur Brown, Jr., Donn Barber, André Fouilhoux, Everett Meeks, and William Emerson.

Ken Reid was born in Norwich, Connecticut in 1893 and received his architectural Bachelor of Science degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1918. In this same year he was commissioned lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy and served for two years in its Construction Corps. From 1922 to 1926 he was personnel manager of the division of industrial cooperation and research at M.I.T. and joined Pencil Points as associate editor in 1926. Here he remained for twenty years and became editor-in-chief of the magazine. In 1947 he was appointed consulting editor of the book division of the Reinhold Publishing Corporation in New York. In the course of these years he had become a member of the American Institute of Architects, the Architectural League of New York, the New York Building Congress, and the Citizens' Housing Council of New York.

But all these activities did not keep Ken Reid from the enjoyment of warm friendships with colleagues, students, and professional architects. He was often present at professional gatherings but he also took delight in informal occasions, especially when they were spiced with the best French cuisine and studiously blended martinis—but he insisted on taking time to enjoy these pleasures. To him they were integral with the best architecture.

His special editorial effort was directed toward creating a medium which should link the architect and the artist, and no practical considerations ever led him away from his deep conviction that architecture was, and must always be, primarily an art.

Reid was a Centurion for sixteen years.

Otis Radcliffe Rice

A clergyman who can play the role of physician when necessary must be helpful to many folk with sick or deeply troubled minds. Otis Rice was a lifelong student of psychology, respected by psychiatrists even when they could not go all the way with him in religion. It was appropriate that such a person should be the chaplain of a hospital and, at St. Luke's in New York, he will be sorely missed. His close association with medical doctors is evident from his membership in the New York Academy of Medicine as an Associate Fellow.

After graduating from Harvard in 1925, Rice spent three years at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and took there his Bachelor of Divinity Degree. He followed this with graduate work in England, France, and Germany. In 1929 he was ordained a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He began his clerical career as assistant minister and pastoral counselor at Trinity Church in Boston. In 1933 he came to New York and occupied the same position in St. Thomas's Church. Five years later he was called to St. Barnabas Church in Irvington, New York, as rector.

Meanwhile, he had been instructor at the General Theological Seminary. In addition to his other duties, he continued to teach. At various times he was on the faculty of Columbia and lectured at Chicago, Vanderbilt, Toronto, and Yale Universities, at the Berkeley Divinity School and at the New Brunswick, the Union, and the Princeton Theological Seminaries.

More than twenty years ago Rice became Director in Charge of Religious Activities and Chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, and his friends believe that his work here was the most congenial of his life. Here he was able to realize to the full his early desire to bring religion and psychiatry to a common meeting ground. He took special interest in work with members of the armed services who had returned from the wars with mental or neurotic disabilities. Two of his books, The Church's Ministry to Returning Servicemen and Psychiatry in the War, tell of this and are testimony to the dual role in which he was so successful. But besides these volumes he wrote many articles and reviews for religious and professional journals on the subject of religion and medical practice.

He was President of the Board of Trustees of the Clifton Springs (N.Y.) Sanatorium and Clinic, a member of the New York Academy of Sciences, and a Fellow of the National Council on Religion in Higher Education.

A Centurion psychiatrist who worked with Otis Rice says: "He seemed cut out of clerical cloth and to this extent remained inscrutable, but he was a kind man and loyal."

John Davison Rockefeller, Junior

It is a relief, in these days, when so much is written and said about the American pursuit of the dollar which some think has replaced our pursuit of happiness, to know a man whose only interest in this currency is in discovering where it will do the most good. This was not only the interest of John Rockefeller, it was his career; and he has been called the greatest philanthropist the world has known.

Wealth and austerity do not commonly go hand in hand, yet both were in the home where this boy grew up. Looking back with all our hindsight, we get the feeling that Destiny, seeing far ahead, had laid a hand on the celebrated father's shoulder, conjuring frugality lest the benefits to mankind of the vast accumulation be curtailed. In any case, the son grew up with the stern sense of wisdom in spending and the scarcely credible generosity that ensued was tempered by long and careful study.

In gifts and endowments, Rockefeller reached far beyond the charities that preoccupy most philanthropists. His was the long vision. His main concern was not to answer an immediate or individual need but rather to prepare for larger and more remote, future, contingencies. Thus, instead of gifts to hospitals, he preferred to advance the progress of the entire medical profession toward eventual treatment and cure. So, too, in his educational and cultural philanthropies, he sought to invest in mankind rather than in men. His restoration of Williamsburg, for instance, gave the promise of perpetual instruction for all Americans and an invitation to the world to understand American evolution.

John was the fifth child and only son of John D. Rockefeller, founder of the Standard Oil Company. His early environment was infused with religion. The ethical code of the Baptist father included many taboos. Cards, dancing, the theatre, tobacco, and alcohol were out of bounds to all the family. The emphasis on education was heavy; the son, especially, was pressed by the weight of it into long, hard study. Though spending on luxury was frowned on in the Rockefeller household, no expense was spared where training and learning were concerned. Thus, when the boy took a fancy to the violin, his father engaged the concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic to teach him. And there were trips to Europe to broaden his cultural outlook.

The young man was so serious and studious when he entered college that friends of the family wished he would play more. He entered Brown in 1893 and relaxed a little in the interest of social experience. In spite of the parental prohibition, he learned to dance, but hardly dared defy it to the extent of amateur theatricals. On a vacation in England, however, he went to the theatre for the first time in his twenty-one years. He graduated from Brown in 1897 and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

It was inevitable that he should enter the family business—for a while at least. But there he found himself much more in sympathy with the philanthropies his father had already begun than in the financial and industrial operations of Standard Oil. Finally, when Rockefeller, Senior, was induced to found an institute for medical research, his son discovered the way of life into which he believed God had called him. When he was thirty-six he left the business office and when, in 1913, the Rockefeller Foundation was created, he became its president. He was now fully launched on his life-long profession—philanthropy.

A mere listing of the Rockefeller benefactions with the briefest summary of their results to date would require a volume. The gifts went to some fifty nations besides the United States; they were made either personally or through the Foundation. He helped in the repairs to Rheims Cathedral after the damages in the First World War and in restorations in Fontainebleau and Versailles. He donated and endowed the Palestine Archaeological Museum in Jerusalem and was a heavy contributor to the cost of the excavation of the Agora and the reconstruction of the Stoa at Athens. Through the Foundation, the universities of Oxford, London, Edinburgh, and Bristol benefited. It was the expressed aim of the Foundation "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world," so its work was by no means confined to the United States.

In America, the most conspicuous Rockefeller philanthropic enterprises, apart from the medical institute, were the Cloisters—a building Rockefeller gave to the Metropolitan Museum and filled with medieval art treasures—Williamsburg, the Palisades Interstate Parkway, road building in Yellowstone National Park, conservation in Yosemite National Park, the Riverside Church, and the United Nations building in New York for which he donated the land. In the dark days of the Depression, the bold building venture of Rockefeller Center in New York not only raised morale in the city but gave work to more than two hundred thousand people.

Rockefeller was quiet, retiring, averse to the publicity which necessarily dogged him and all his family; but perhaps his tolerance was, in view of his background, his most remarkable trait. The first demonstration of this came in the aftermath of the sensational Colorado coal strike of 1914 when, though his father was the largest shareholder in the struck company, he vigorously defended the right of the miners to share in the negotiations that should determine their working conditions—a position that helped alter the entire labor-management relationship in American industry. Later, his change of attitude toward National Prohibition, which he had once favored, was evidence of his willingness to study all the evidence. His public advocacy of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment is said to have had a decisive effect on legislative opinion.

"By his death," said the obituary in the London Times,

"humanity has lost one of the truest and most practical friends it has ever known."

We in the Century are proud of the membership of John Davison Rockefeller and proud too that five members of the Rockefeller family have been Centurions.

Carl Purington Rollins

Carl Rollins was a printer, a book designer, and an authority on the graphic arts. With these things he was preoccupied from his high school days, and he reached a place in the first rank of American typographical artists. To him type-faces had personalities and he was meticulous in his efforts to adapt them precisely to the subject matter of the book in hand. For example, some types were "strong," others "effeminate," and these were identified in his mind with certain kinds of books.

Rollins was born in West Newbury, Massachusetts; he prepared for college at the Newburyport High School, where he first worked at printing; he then went to Harvard and did the first printing that was done in the present building of the Harvard University Press. When he left Harvard in 1900, he worked for a time as a compositor in Boston and then established the Montague Press at Montague, Massachusetts, in which he learned to design fine books. In 1918 he went to Yale as a designer and was soon appointed printer to the University. It was with Yale that he has been mainly identified. For the Yale University Press, he produced more than two thousand books and completely revolutionized the printing operations of the University library. At the library, also, he established the Bibliographical Press.

In the 1930's Rollins was printing consultant to the University of California and Rutgers University. In 1941 he was awarded the gold medal for printing excellence of the American Institute of the Graphic Arts—a decoration that previously had been given to Centurion Bruce Rogers. Rollins was an admirer of Rogers and wrote his biography in a book entitled B.R., America's Typographical Playboy.

“Carl,” writes a Centurion friend, “faced life with a smile. He was a combination of exacting craftsman, perceptive artist and just and well balanced critic. . . . He was entertained by human foibles, but was never malicious. He remained in high good humor until the hour of death.”

This must have been difficult, for his eyesight gradually failed until he went blind—a singularly painful affliction for one of his trade and tastes. Yet he never stopped work. With the generous and skillful aid of his wife, to whom he was able to communicate the visual images of type faces, composition, arrangement, and lay-out, he continued to design and for another Centurion friend he made what the author thought was the most beautiful book of his career.

A great comfort to Rollins in his blindness (as it has been to other afflicted Centurions) was the great institution of “talking books” operated by the Library of Congress. In his last years, he got the greatest enjoyment from listening to these records.

“Carl,” writes another Centurion who was closely associated with him at Yale, “was one of the most vital, buoyant, energetic people I have ever known, a master craftsman in his field, and a staunch outspoken friend to those of us who knew and worked with him.”

Walter Nathan Rothschild

Many great projects have come out of conversations at Century monthly dinners. Centurions are often not content with just food and fun: the impulse to create moves fast across tables at which congenial company sits; sometimes it flies out to far places. One Centurion who was never happy except when he was initiating some vast scheme to inspire or comfort his fellow men was Walter Rothschild, and when he came to a dinner something exciting was sure to happen in the world outside.

There is a state park in Princeton on the Revolutionary battlefield there, and lately a monument has been built over the graves of British and American soldiers that few realize owes its completion to a conversation at a Century dinner. Walter Rothschild learned there of the concept of this "portico" and with characteristic enthusiasm and energy went out to promote the fund for the memorial. It was one of the last of his good deeds but one that was close to his heart because, since college days, the Princeton community had been for him an Elysian field.

A simple enumeration of the benefits Rothschild conferred and of the important educational, religious, and welfare projects he promoted would take many pages of our little book. On the Board of Trustees of Sarah Lawrence College he had Centurion colleagues who have given testimony to the value of his work there. "We loved him as a human being," wrote one, "and valued him as a co-worker. His hand was steady and his judgment calm and sound. He was always patient and even-tempered, but he had flavor and point, the products of a keen mind and a sense of humor." These words were incorporated in a resolution adopted by the Sarah Lawrence Board of Trustees in their meeting following Rothschild's death. He is especially remembered at Sarah Lawrence for his courageous defence of academic freedom when this was under attack by the American Legion and when a Senate Committee was investigating college professors.

But Sarah Lawrence was only one of a dozen interests which made all kinds of demands on Rothschild's energy up to the time of his death. There were two Princeton University Councils, three Girl Scout committees, a Red Cross campaign, two Jewish philanthropic institutions, the National Urban League, and Associates of the Harvard Business School. It was never a question with Walter Rothschild of simply lending his name to an activity; everything he entered, he became immersed in.

Born in New York in 1892, Rothschild had his secondary education at Brooklyn Polytechnic Preparatory and at Lawrenceville. He took his Litt.B. at Princeton in 1913. Immediately after graduating, he became interested in the business of retail merchandise, which led to directorships in William F. Filene's Sons Company, Douglas Gibbons Company and, eventually, in the Brooklyn store of Abraham and Straus, of which he was president. In the First World War he was lieutenant (junior grade) in the United States Naval Reserve. During the Second World War he was director and member of the executive committee of United Service Organizations and vice-president of the National War Fund. In 1947 he received the Medal of Freedom from the War Department.

We are sorry that he was with us in the Century for only five years, but in that time he established himself as a true Centurion in every sense.

Beardsley Ruml

No one ever called Beardsley Ruml by his full first name. Far and wide—and he was known very far and very wide—no one thought of him but as “B.” It took too long to say Beardsley; by the time you had said it, he was out the door and off on some new adventure of the mind. He created many things, but ideas were the commodity that came most profusely from the factory of his brain. They emerged so fast that they seemed to have been on a production line. “B,” a friend once said to him, “you pour forth so many ideas that by the laws of chance, some of them are bound to be good.” That many of them have been proved in government and business and education.

One, for example, was the pay-as-you-go plan for collecting income taxes, which came just in time to help finance the cost to the nation of the Second World War. Why not, he suggested, forgive 1942 taxes so as to begin collecting 1943 taxes on a withholding basis?

“Nothing,” said B, “really will be lost. All you do is set your tax clock ahead a year. It’s as simple as Daylight Saving Time.”

To one who was with him at the time he thought this out, he said, characteristically, “Let’s call it pay as you go because that isn’t what it means.”

He had trouble persuading the Treasury Department of the plan’s value; it was still tougher to make Congress believe it would work so that they could enact it into law. But

B was a genius at persuading. An associate tells that to do this he would draw for his analogies "on Greek mythology, on Roman social changes, on Turgot, on the stages leading up to feudalism and the causes of its decline and on the collective life of the bee."

Another idea was the measurement of intelligence, useful in the personnel problems of both Army and business. Still another resulted in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, known in the New Deal alphabet as AAA. He used to say that he did his best in the creation of ideas when he was most relaxed—in a big armchair, for instance, or on a train—because he was then in a "state of dispersed attention. No one can think," he added, "if he's uncomfortable."

Beardsley Ruml was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1894. He received a B.S. from Dartmouth in 1915 and, two years later, his doctorate at the University of Chicago. For a while with time out for work with the Army in the First World War in the direction of trade tests, he was instructor at the Carnegie Institute of Technology. In 1921 Centurion James Rowland Angell, then president of the Carnegie Corporation, made him his assistant; the following year, when he was only twenty-seven, Centurion John D. Rockefeller, Jr., made him director of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial. Eight years later he was chosen Professor of Education by the University of Chicago, then when the new Social Science division was installed at the university, he became its dean. A Centurion who knew him well at Chicago, tells that "the vitality of Chicago as the center of the social sciences, which has lasted to this day, goes back to the experiments he inaugurated."

He left Chicago in 1934 to become treasurer of R. H.

Macy and Company. Some ten years later he was made Chairman of the Board. When Macy's hired him, he was told that his only duty would be to "challenge our thinking." At Macy's he devised systems which gave new incentives to employees and greatly enhanced the prosperity of the corporation.

A Centurion friend writes of B Ruml:

"In addition to his joviality, the principal thing about him was his objectivity. And he was probably the most original man about ways of getting things done that I have ever seen."

He was with us for more than thirty years.

George Paull Torrence Sargent

"The Rector got on his bicycle and tended his flock." Thus a fellow clergyman tells of Paull Sargent's early activity when, at the age of twenty-eight, he was called to be rector of St. Thomas's Church in Battle Creek, Michigan. He was never content to sit behind a desk in the parish house and let members of his congregation come to him with their questions and their troubles. Each one he sought out and made his friend; if the friend then needed help, the rector was there to give it—not in an austere church office but in the parish-ioner's own home.

Those who knew him well chose Paull of his four names to call him by. It was not a Christian name like that of the saint, it was a family name—which accounts for the double l. But in all formal correspondence, in everything that was written about him, all the names were used.

Saint Bartholomew's Church was the place of his last ministry—from here he retired, to the sorrow of a congregation that greatly loved and admired him. He resigned before the official retirement age because, so his intimates said, he wanted Centurion Anson Phelps Stokes to succeed him and he was afraid if he waited too long, Stokes would be called to another parish which was soon to have a vacancy.

But though he ended his career at the great church on Park Avenue, he began it far from New York. He was born in Cincinnati and after graduation from Yale and from the General Theological Seminary his first ministries were in Indiana and Michigan. When he came east, it was as dean of the Cathedral of the Incarnation of the Long Island diocese. In the First World War, he was a Navy chaplain.

Sargent believed that the American people were menaced by the disease of spiritual anemia; he urged Americans toward religious commitment in facing the complex and confused contingencies of modern life. He believed too that the difficult problems of today could be better solved by the "dedication of men and women to the service of Christ" than by "vast schemes for the uplifting of humanity."

When he was installed as Saint Bartholomew's rector, four bishops, thirty-two lesser clergymen, and twenty-nine prominent laymen took part in the service. When the church celebrated its centennial, Sargent was in charge of the ceremonies.

Sargent was extraordinarily kind to those in trouble. He invariably wrote letters of condolence to the women of his congregations on the death of their husbands. On one occasion he spent thirty-six continuous hours with a man who was contemplating suicide—even moving a cot into the man's room and sleeping there. He would read aloud, pray, and talk, and he ended by taking the man's mind off his troubles.

Herbert Ferlando Schwarz

Few New York children have grown up without some acquaintance with the Fifth Avenue toy shop, F. A. O. Schwarz. It was founded by Herbert Schwarz's father and Herbert was one of its directors. In his time away from the bees, he was its wise counselor in matters of finance. But the bees were his preoccupation, especially the stingless variety. He was an entomologist and a member of the staff of the American Museum of Natural History. He edited the Museum's journal, Natural History, and wrote two important books on his favorite subject. These were Stingless Bees of the Western Hemisphere and The Genus Melitona. They were the result of extensive field work in many out-of-the-way corners of the world.

More than a hundred years ago, father Schwarz came to the United States from Germany and started business in Baltimore in association with his older brothers. He moved to New York in 1870 and started the famous toy store. Herbert was the youngest of his children.

Graduating from Harvard in 1904, he entered G. P. Putnam's publishing house and, for a time, he was head of the editorial department. In his younger years in New York he was active in Squadron A. He was a great horseman. But his growing interest in insect life soon led him into the wide travels that were to prepare him for his museum career. He also took graduate courses in entomology at Columbia.

He impressed everyone who knew him with his quiet friendliness, his modesty, and his courtesy. He was anonymously generous to unfortunate friends and some have told that he truly saved them in their distress. Like the best of those persons who are devoted to science he was wholly free of prejudice.

Herbert Schwarz was a former president of the New York Entomological Society and had also been editor of publications for the New York Academy of Sciences.

He was a Centurion for twenty-one years.

Ellery Sedgwick

"New York is a goldfish bowl where everybody follows the same narrow round." That was the opinion of Editor Ellery Sedgwick, who used to say that the reason both he on the Atlantic and Lorimer on the Saturday Evening Post did so well as editors was that neither lived in New York. If your job was in Boston or Philadelphia, the people that really mattered would seek you out, whereas in New York you were so surrounded by cranks they couldn't get at you.

But whether or not this was the reason—and some successful New York editors will vehemently deny it—Ellery Sedgwick certainly made a go of the Atlantic. When he took it over (lock, stock, and barrel) in 1908, it was, along with the Transcript, a highly respectable prop of the Boston brahmin, but out of the shadow of Beacon Hill it was regarded as stuffy if not provincial and its circulation was snobbishly small. Sedgwick infused it with life. Though a gifted writer himself, he preferred to remain behind the scenes and exploit the gifts of others. He was called an impresario who could inspire writers to surpass themselves or non-writers to tell their own stories in readable words. Indeed, much of the success of the Atlantic under Sedgwick's direction came from the publication of accounts by amateur authors of exceptional experiences.

Before and during the First World War, the Atlantic exerted an important influence on public opinion through its support of Woodrow Wilson. This naturally aroused much controversy—especially among isolationists—but, as we look back on Sedgwick's position then, he appears as a champion of internationalism ahead of his time.

Sedgwick was a vigorous fighter against the forces of censorship—particularly strong in Boston. Under his leadership a victory came to the cause of literary freedom when, in 1929, the Massachusetts law was altered so that the judgment of obscenity in a book could be made only on the work as a whole rather than on passages out of context.

Although the Sedgwick ancestral home is in Stockbridge, Ellery was born in New York. He received his bachelor's degree from Harvard College in 1894. For a while he taught at Groton, then he became associate editor of The Youth's Companion. For five years after 1900, he was editor-in-chief of Leslie's Monthly Magazine. After that he was successively with the American Magazine, McClure's Magazine, and D. Appleton and Company. Editorship of the Atlantic had been, however, a boyhood ambition and this he was able to gratify by buying the periodical and thus becoming its undisputed dictator.

He used to say that twenty years was the normal life span of a magazine editor; that after that, his magazine would become repetitive and stale. He held to that conviction and resigned in 1938. In the next year he sold his controlling interest in the magazine in what was said to be the most profitable cash transaction in late publishing history.

Immediately after his retirement, he aroused wide controversy by two articles in the New York Times in praise of Franco's regime in Spain. These were based on a Spanish visit which included an interview with the dictator.

His visits to New York usually included an hour or so at the Century, for which he had great affection. He continued to come to the club even after his long, progressive arthritic trouble required the use of a wheel chair.

Ellery Sedgwick was one of the dominant figures in the transition period of American literature. He saw the late Victorian style decline into the feeble romanticism that characterized our writing at the turn of the century and he welcomed the revival of the 1920's. To such authors as Ernest Hemingway he offered the hospitality of the Atlantic when all other doors were closed to them. At least until the coming of the New Deal he was anything but conservative. His first vote was for Bryan in 1896 and he was a staunch defender of Al Smith. In the New Deal years, as a liberal friend expressed it, "hardening of the political arteries set in."

Harold Reeve Sleeper

Harold Sleeper might be called a literary interpreter of architecture. He wrote what is known as the "Bible" in the drafting room of almost every architect and every architectural school. This was Architectural Graphic Standards, a best seller in its field. Five revisions of the book gave it perennial life. This was costly to its readers because they couldn't get along without the latest edition and had to buy it.

His emphasis was on specifications rather than drawings—a less glamorous medium to be sure, and for that reason often neglected. He believed in writing about the buildings he was designing rather than relying wholly on a graphic presentation, and in the courses he gave at Columbia and Princeton on Specifications he taught his students how to describe buildings without the aid of the pencil and drawing board. Well before it became fashionable to do so, he and his close colleagues developed an attitude about architecture as a social art.

After early student days in Manila and in Paris, he prepared at Phillips Exeter Academy for Cornell, where he took his architectural degree in 1915. He then did postgraduate work at New York University. In the First World War he served as battalion adjutant of the 77th Field Artillery, which was attached to the camouflage division of the 40th Engineers.

He began his architectural practice with the firm of Trowbridge and Ackerman; later he became an associate of Frederick L. Ackerman and Charles G. Ramsey as well as carrying on his own practice. He contributed to the building of Balch Hall at Cornell and to that of the Brooklyn Central Y.M.C.A. He also worked on the Lillian Wald Houses in New York.

In 1943, Sleeper received the Arnold Brunner Scholarship from the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects and the Architectural League of New York. Six years later he was elected a Fellow of the Institute. In 1958 he was appointed by Mayor Wagner to a five-year term on the influential Board of Standards and Appeals, which rules on appeals of property owners from building and fire regulations and sets the standards for building materials.

As he was a Centurion for only two years, most of us outside the wide circle of his architect friends had little chance to know him.

Henry Beale Spelman

Because of the delay in obtaining material concerning this member, the Historian is obliged to postpone his memorial to a later Year-Book.

Herbert Lincoln Spencer

A teacher, college president, engineer, and foundation executive, Herbert Spencer had much to give in many directions. He called himself a professional mechanical engineer but this did not prevent him from being, at various times, a high school principal, a trustee of a theological seminary, the president of a child guidance clinic, the dean of a college of arts and sciences, a Y.M.C.A. director, a worker on a displaced persons commission, and a member of eleven fraternities. As culmination of his varied career he was head of the Kress Foundation.

Born at Whitney Point, New York, in 1894, his education was interrupted by the First World War, in which he served with the Army Air Corps as civilian engineer. He took his B.S. degree from the Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1921. The year after his graduation he was vice-principal and teacher at the Latimer Junior High School in Pittsburgh; five years later he was vice-principal of the Henry Clay Frick Training School for Teachers and became principal soon after. When he was appointed dean in the university of Pittsburgh he certainly seemed on the way to an academic rather than a practicing engineering career; this was advanced by the presidency of the University of Pennsylvania's College for Women and that of Bucknell University.

The Second World War brought him back to engineering, but to its academic rather than its practical side. He took an active part in the large program of intensive technical war training that was carried on throughout the war by the United States Office of Education. He was appointed educational expert for the Army's Air Service Training Program and later to the Navy's Manpower Survey Commission. In 1949 he entered the Samuel H. Kress Foundation as executive director.

A Centurion friend was struck by the contrast between his "friendly and mild" manner and his "lion courage" when in the performance of his duties as foundation executive he was faced with a decision between principle and self-interest.

Markley Stevenson

Government grounds tend to be dreary, sterile, and institutional, and in the past many of them have, like the buildings they surrounded, been planned and cultivated with a minimum of imagination. That is why we are happy to see someone with the talents of Markley Stevenson get into their design. The recent addition to the Capitol in Washington, the House Office Building, and the Senate garage bear testimony to his skill in creating settings of beauty and dignity. He was also consulting landscape architect for the Army, and he was responsible for the landscape work on the United States military cemeteries abroad.

Stevenson began life as an engineer. He graduated from Lafayette College in 1907 and his first job was in a coal mine. The conditions he worked in tickled his sense of humor and he liked to recall how he roomed and slept in a double bed with a laconic Scotsman who beyond a gloomy "good night" and "good morning" never uttered a word. This must have been tough for a genial person like Markley, who in later years so greatly enjoyed good conversation as well as good food and drink at the Century.

But after the coal mine he went to Harvard and won a Master of Landscape Architecture degree. He then taught at the Pennsylvania School of Horticulture for Women and later became consulting architect with the Pennsylvania State Bureau of Parks.

In 1928, he became a partner of Centurion Robert Wheelwright in the firm of Wheelwright, Stevenson and Langran in Philadelphia.

"It is needless to say (after lasting over twenty-two years) that the partnership proved a happy association." So tells his associate. "Markley was a sturdy soul, one in whom you could place implicit trust. His judgment was sound, not only in the engineering phases of landscape design but in the esthetic."

Stevenson was at one time a member of Philadelphia's City Planning Commission, and in 1952 he was appointed to the Philadelphia Art Commission. He had been a member of the American Battle Monuments Commission since 1948. He was a former president and secretary of the American Society of Landscape Architects.

He had been a Centurion since 1948.

James Graham Phelps Stokes

It is a rare honor that our Association gives to Centurions who have been members for fifty years. Graham Stokes was thus honored in 1954. When, in 1904, he was elected, Stokes was only thirty-two—almost a record in youth. At eighty-eight, he had outlived his close friends in the Club.

Stokes was known as "the millionaire Socialist." In his young days, he turned from the study of medicine to welfare work. For many years he lived in the heart of the East Side, first at the University Settlement and later in a flat on Norfolk Street. In 1905 much publicity was given to his marriage to Rose Harriet Pastor, a former cigar-maker who had become an ardent champion, in her writing and other promotion work, of socialism and so-called "left-wing" causes. She was, indeed, so wholly dedicated to this philosophy that, during the First World War, she was arrested for obstructing the draft.

Graham Stokes (as he was known to his friends) once made this statement about his views—words which must have sent cold chills down the spines of his fellow millionaires:

"Till complete industrial freedom is achieved, we shall continue to have the revolting spectacle on every hand of a wealthy class purchasing ease and comfort with the proceeds of privileged extortion, while the majority of the producers of wealth struggle on in poverty and suffer and die for lack of the needful things that they themselves have produced in abundance."

Tall, erect, and handsome, Stokes came to be a familiar figure in the Norfolk Street neighborhood, greeted by scores in much the same affectionate and admiring way that Al Smith knew so well. For many years he was chairman of the board of Hartley House, a celebrated settlement house founded in early reform days. He was greatly interested, too, in prison reform, in boys' clubs and in various charitable and philanthropic enterprises, including the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the New York Juvenile Asylum, and the People's Institute.

With the entrance of the United States into the First World War, Stokes experienced a conflict between his patriotism and the prevailing pacifist views of Socialists. He joined the Coast Artillery, in which he later became major. At the low point of Allied fortunes in 1918, at a time when there were occasional mutinies in the French military service, he went to France to reassure the malcontents there.

It was at this point that he moved away from his earlier convictions. This brought a breach with his wife, who apparently showed Communist leanings, and they were divorced in 1925. His remarriage to Lettice Lee Sands was consistently happy. Through the remaining thirty-five years of his life he swung to the right in politics and was active in business affairs.

Stokes was born in New York and was educated at Yale, from which he graduated in 1892. He received his degree as Doctor of Medicine from Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1896. He joined Squadron A of the New York National Guard and served in the Spanish-American War. In 1904 he was a candidate for presidential elector on the Populist ticket and for President of the City Board of Aldermen on a municipal ownership platform in 1905. He was a founder of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society and ran for various offices in New York and Connecticut on the Socialist ticket. These early socialistic ventures were recently described by a friend as reflecting chiefly "an aspiration for social justice rather than a political pattern." He changed as American society changed; as the measure of social justice increased, and as the crying needs of reform were answered.

In the changing temper of the times in which he lived, J. G. Phelps Stokes is a kind of symbol. In the Century, he was a striking example of the wide-ranging variety of our membership.

Pierson Underwood

When a boy begins a serious study of the violin at nine, it is probable that music will be in the foreground of his adult life. Pierson Underwood abundantly fulfilled that promise. His interest in it took him beyond performance and composition into what has come to be called musicology. He was a musical scholar; his researches into the literature and history of music resulted in his enlarging that literature and in his efforts to rouse the response to music and to stimulate its appreciation through a constantly widening circle. In the profession he adopted—that of radio program director—he had much opportunity for what he wanted most to do.

Music, however, did not confine him. Though he played in many chamber music groups and semi-professional orchestras and composed choral works, his talents reached into other territory. He was an etcher, a designer of stained-glass windows, and a watercolor artist. Several anthologies contain his poems, and he edited books of poems by college students. During the Second World War he was Executive Officer in the Liberated Areas Division of the State Department and after the war was a special attaché to the United States Embassy in Warsaw.

Pierson Underwood took a war degree (B.A.) with the class of 1918 at Yale. From 1917 to 1919, he served in the field artillery in the A.E.F. In the immediate postwar years, he studied at the Harvard Law School, Cambridge University in England, and the Sorbonne in Paris. Later he studied design and etching in the Art Students League in New York and did extensive research in old music and poetry in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, the New York Public Library, and the Library of Congress. In 1939 he collected folk music in the field in Virginia. In the period 1942-45 he was treasurer of the Board of Directors of the League of Composers, in which he initiated the "Composers' Theatre"; and under the sponsorship of the League, of Lowell House, and of CBS he was responsible for the production of Randall Thompson's "Solomon and Balkis." From 1946 he was associated with Radio Station WGMS (Washington's Good Music Station), first as Music Director, later as Program Director, and finally as Chairman of the Board.

Companion to his talents were enthusiasm, warmth, and humor. These his friends sadly miss, as his colleagues miss his directive strength. He was in the Century twenty-three years.

Bradford Williams

It sometimes seems as if most of the beautiful gardens in America must have been laid out by Centurions. Our roster of landscape architects parallels that of building architects. That is as it should be for, as the American Academy in Rome teaches, these trades must go hand in hand. For centuries in Europe, building design and planting plan have been interdependent.

Bradford Williams was a leader in both the practice and the literature of landscape architecture. His special interest was the landscape conservation and preservation of open spaces and historic sites, and he was identified with several organizations that promoted these endeavors. He was secretary, for instance, of the Castle Hill Foundation of the Massachusetts Trustees of Reservations at Ipswich and he was active, too, in the British National Trust and the National Trust for Historic Preservation in the United States.

Williams was born in Newton, Massachusetts, in 1897 and took his bachelor's degree from Harvard College in 1921. Three years later he won a master's degree from Harvard Graduate School in Landscape Architecture.

His apprenticeship was served in the offices of Olmsted Brothers and Fletcher Steele. He then opened his own office for the practice of his profession in Boston, but even his early career was not confined to private work. He lectured extensively, he served on the Overseers' Committee of Harvard's Graduate School of Design, and for some thirty years was Corresponding Secretary of the American Society of Landscape Architects and Editor of Landscape Architecture. A fellow member said of him that he was the heart of the Society and "pumped into it his own life blood." Unhappily a crippling disability kept him from the travel he would have enjoyed, including trips to New York and consequent visits to the Century.

But he loved the Club and to come to it was a happy event. Before each trip, he would write his many member friends so that they might lunch or dine with him. When he died—much too young by Centurion standards—the President of the American Society of Landscape Architects wrote our Secretary:

"I know he would want me to notify you immediately, for he was an utterly dedicated member."
